ORAL TEACHING.

BY HENRY KIDDLE, A. M.,
Principal of the Normal School, New York.

Oral teaching is meant, technically, instruction which proceeds directly from the teacher, without the use of any book—the knowledge imparted coming from the stores of the teacher's own mind. It is the most natural kind of teaching, and is the one which should be practiced by the parent during the first period of the child's life. It is the most natural kind of teaching, and is the one which should be practiced by the parent during the first period of the child's life.

This admirable series of remarkable presents, without doubt, the proper guide and standard for oral scientific instruction in elementary schools. The tendency, on the part of many teachers, is to narrow the field of instruction; to adopt a mechanical, routine method; to pour into the pupil's mind facts, instead of developing "intellectual habits," cultivating the powers of observation and reflection, and thus rendering the pupil really intelligent.
