THE BRIDGE OF LIFE.

The slender bridge of human life is thrown

The past and future from its mouldering piers;

The present moment is its frail keystone.

From "dust thon art" the arch begins to rise:

"To dust" the fashion of its form descends

"Shalt thou return," the higher curve implies

Seen by youth's magle light upon that arch.

How lovely does each far-off scene appear !

Our weary footsteps bring the vision near !-

Twas fabled that beneath the rainbow's foot

The golden (years that would have made)

o where life's arch of, many colors leads,

And leaves a cold gray waste of care-behind

Th' inverted shadow of a bridge on high,

And thus the arch in air and water makes

So 'tis with life : the things that do appear.

Are fleeting shadows on time's passing tide,

From viewless things that changelessly abide,

The sphere of sense is incomplete, and pleads

To things of faith, which give them tri

That heaven is but the counterpart of earth.

The pler that rests upon this shore's the same

As that which stands upon the further bank

Without the shadow of a world of bliss,

NOTES ON THE INTERNATIONAL LESSONS.

SEPTEMBER 12, 1875 THIED QUARTER. NO. VI

The first section of this tenth chapter treats of false shepherds and the true Shepherd. The first were represented in that day by the Pharisces. They fulfilled the prophetic declarations of the Old Testament. (Compare Jer, xxiii: 1-2; Ežek. xxxiv: 1-10; Zech. xi: 4, 5). The preceding chapter shows how thoroughly they played their role (ix: 34). This gave Jesus the occasion to present himself as the true, the good Shepherd. Strictly speaking, this passage is not a parable. The word translated "varable" in the 6th verse (paroimia) is not the word used by the Synoptists (parabole), which means a It is used as a mineral paint and for many parable. St. John never uses this latter word, but instead employs paroimin four times. This difference in phraseology has a meaning. And accordingly we find that St. John never follows the exact type of the Parable, though preserving its essence in the relation of addresses and 4-12).
