FOURTH QUARTER. NO. VI. The promise of the Old Testament is the promise of the Messiah; the promise of the New Testament is the promise of the Holy Spirit. It was necessary that Christ should come in the flesh to secure salvation for sinners; it was necessary that the Spirit should come juto their bearts to apply and realize salvation to sinners. Redemption must be both a matter of faith and a matter of experience; it is an objective fact and it is a subjective life. So after Christ had died to work out and perfect a plenteous redemption, and an everlasting righteousness, it was expedient for his people that he in the blood from generation to gen- grass, he finds a yellow-jackets' nest, power and grace: he wrought no miracles m the blood from generation to generation to generation to gets one into his wool and runs howling the cration, to reveal themselves some gets one into his wool and runs howling the cration, to reveal themselves some gets one into his wool and runs howling the with authority until filled with the spirit. The functions of the Comforter are precisely defined in this passage. 1. He has a convictive work to do for the world. "He will reprove (or convince) the world belief in relation to Christ (v. 9); "and of rightcousness;" i. i., of the appropriate Christ for the salvation of all sinners (v. 10); and of Judgment; i. e., of the certainty and condemning character of the tobacco in the hash while the cook judgment upon Satan and all the children of disobedience (v. 11).
