THE LONGEST WAY ROUND. It was the logest way round, we know, But never seemed road so short before For Jos and I were only half through Promising all things good and true, When there was the old familiar door. And father was looking out for me-Dear old father so wise and good ! And he kindly pretended not to see How wonderfully shy and glad were we, We paused, and silent before him stood. "Seems to me you are late to-night.

H'm! 'lost your way on the homeward route,'
You did, ea?" Oh, but the moon shone bright, Betraying my blushes to father's sight, Betraying our secret, without a doubt ! Did he remember his own young day? Maybe so, for he asked me no more. And Joe and I parted in the usual way-A simple "good-night," and no more say, And then between us the cottage door. But one glad night, as we neared the gate Where father stood waiting and watching for

He gravely said, " You are very late; Just step inside here, Joe, and wait Till I can learn what the cause may be. Well, never mind what the old clock said When I kissed Joe, on the porch, "good night," But every fear from my heart had fled As on Joe's strong heart I bowed my head, Knowing that father said I might,
