The first speaker was Hon. Geo. LANDON. It was his first appearance before the Republicans of Athens for many years, and the hearty reception accorded him was a cheering evidence of their high regard for his ability as a public speaker, as well as his opinions on the great questions at issue in the pend ing campaign. Mr. L.'s speech was one of his most cloquent efforts; his arraignment of the Democrotic party was as severe as it was merited. He proyed conclusively that it would be dangerous experiment to give them further control of the affairs of govrnment. The Republican party, with all its faults, and notwithstand ing the fact that some bad men had been elevated to high positions by it, was the only hope of the country.

Mr. Landon was followed by Col Overton, who spoke for about fifty minutes in a most eloquent, impresive and logical manner, fully sus taining the enviable reputation h enjoys of being the rising man the Republican party in Northern Pennsylvania. SENSIBLE.—Congress WALKER, of Corning, in a letter declining a renomination, closes with the following rebuke of the leaders of his party for their persistent efforts during the past winter to destroy the confidence of the people in our rulers. Mr. WALKER received the hearty commendations of his Republican constituents last winter for his independence in refuting BEN HILL'S wicked charges in regard to the reatment of rebel prisoners at Elmira. He has too much will of his own to be an acceptable Democrat: "I cannot close this communication without expressing my disapprobation at the small value placed upon the character of one holding a responsible position. He may act upon the best of motives, for which he considers the best interests of the people, but should it afterwards transpire that he had made a mistake. he is looked upon as no better than a criminal, and while they remember not the good that he has done, they will ransack his whole life to prove him a villain.
