The course of the TIMES during the Presidential campaign has secured for its hosts of new friends, and has placed beyond controversy its position as the foremost Republican journal in the United States. During the political struggle preceding the election the follness, accuracy, and fairness of lishnews reports were as obvious as its vigor and breadth of view as alsorgan of public opinion. The critical situation in which the country is placed by the disputed result of the election, has been promptly recognized by the TIMES, but it has found no reason to modify the claim which it urged, alone among its colemporaries, that the vote of the 7third November secured a majority of Electoral votes for Hayes and Wueeler. Headers of the 7thirds on the day following the election were placed in pessession of returns which were simply the upsit complete and traisvortup published in any plart of the Union. The more thoroughly the facts of the election are disentangied from the mass of Democratic falsehood and pretense which has been thrown around them, the more clearly is the busiter verscled of the claims made by the TIMES the morning after election.
