TEMPERANCE.—Editor: A Murphy meeting was held here yesterday afternoon in the M. E. Church. There was a large attendance, and some sixty took the pledge. The meeting was addressed by H. HARRIS and C. H. ALLEN, of your place. Both speakers were listened to with interest, and all the promises of the speakers as to the result were over-fulfilled here. Mr. HARRIS is one of the most earnest talkers we ever listened to, and the way he relates his own experience cannot fail to produce an effect on all who hear him. Mr. ALLEN is a man of all who hear him. Mr. ALLEN is a man of all who hear him.

Now being in the glen, we wander in a sort of meandering scramble.

Now being in the glen, we wander in a sort of meandering scramble. From rock to rock descending, down the brawling, thundering stream, perhaps half a mile, or so, passing in succession four walls, varying from 20 to 40 feet high. One or two of these three walls are of the same height, and are of the same height, and are of the same height.

A SOLDIER'S DINNER.—So much time has elapsed since the days of soldiering, that a short description of a soldier's dinner in camp, will not only call to the memory of old soldiers such scenes, but will prove interesting to those who know nothing of camp life. The article is a little, but it is a little, but it is a little.

ALMOST A BRIDLEWAY.—A few evenings since, a lady, with her two daughters, was boarding at a private house in this town, was started in the night by a strange noise in her sleeping room, seeming to proceed from her bureau, as if a burglar were softly rifling the drawers. Nothing daunted, she sprang out of bed, and in a moment was on her feet, and in a moment was on her feet.

It may be added that the glen in its present wild condition, is inaccessible to us, and to some very gentle gentlemen. It is not known whether Mr. HARRIS, or any body else, intends to conquer its inaccessible character or not; the scenery within it is certainly wild enough and picturesque enough, to justify the expense.
