Oan We Grow Corn Profitably? The question which heads this article is an interesting one to thousands of Eastern farmers, and in far too many cases, especially in New England, it has been answered in the negative. Not that I would have farmers grow any crops merely for the name of it. Profit is the object sought in good farming, and if it conduces to profit to buy corn, wheat, butter or even milk, let each and all of these articles be bought rather than grown. But it is well to be quite sure of our ground before discarding any article of produce and especially so important a proc as corn. Many centuries ago a wise Roman remarked that selling not old-time foggvism, it might be well to buying was the business of the far- hear the testimony of each a man as John mer. We hold to something of this Tyndall, one of the profoundest thinkeridea in the everywhere prevalent of the age." He then gives a paragraph belief that the farmer is more inde- quoted from that philosopher and leaves pendent than other classes of citizens as to infer that parsing is the ultima thule the theory of his independence of English studies. Now without any being, of course, that he can produce desire to differ from the writer in his from his farm whatever he absolutely high estimate of Mr. Tyndall, I must say needs. This is not true nowadays- that the experience of many teachers, partly because men's needs have from the Institute instructor down grown apace with the increase of and up," appears to me of more value civilization. Most families find kerosene oil a necessity in our long winters; but if a farmer has an oilwell on his farm the chances are that -the lard is not good for much else. Even in clothing most farmers! families would be scantily dressed indeed, if they were obliged to depend on the flax which they grow and hatcheled or the wool that they carded and spun, clipped from sheep which they had shorn. I do not regret the old days when the reverse of this was true. The division of labor which absolves ninety-nine hundredths of farmers from the neces sity of growing flax or wool, has to be relieved from the necessity of give place to one which places higher growing corn. Still I do not believe it, and should regard such relief as a very doubtful advantage. Corn is the great American staple. Its increasing use in Europe will make it more and more important as an article of export. It any section of the country is unable to profitably produce this staple at must lose much of the wealth that it will bring to the country. Corn ims been profitably grown in Eastern States, and with good management it is yet a fairly paying crop.

. One thing can be said in its favor: it is never a failure on suitable. ground, and it always pays its way on highpriced, Eastern lands by the avalue of the coarse fodder which it vields. An acre of corn stover is worth, on an average nearly as much as feed for cattle as an average acre of hay. For milch cows it is worth der is reckoned of little value. As a preventive is cheaper and better than a cure, we would advise those who build a poultry house to give it a good whitewashing, both inside and out, before the fowls are let inside. To make the whitewash still more distasteful to the vermin which have such a taste for poultry, mix a small quantity of carbolic acid with the wash, stir if well till it dissolves, and then apply. It is not injurious to the fowls but. it is to vermin, and at the same time it is a deodorizer and disinfectant.

FARMERS and all who have charge of cows may learn a lesson from the following anecdote which we clip from an exchange: A market gardener had a very fine cow that was milked week after week by hired men. He observed that the amount of butter he carried to market weighed about a pound more on each alternate week. He watched the men and tried the cow after they had finished milking, but always found that there was no milk left in the teats. He finally asked the Skotch dar-illustration of the difference in effect girl who took care of the milk if she between long and short terms. Short could account for the difference. BAD LITERATURE

In these days of moral reform, when the public mind is agitated upon the various vices of society, and the best talent of the land is putting forth gigantic efforts for the suppression of evil, one crime has been almost overlooked, or at least ignored. I refer to the publication of cheap reading matter for boys and girls, vile in its nature, and calculated to inflame the contucul mind with all the bad passions to which humanity is subject:

There is nothing more pernicious in its effects upon the mind that the reading of had literature. The Dime Novel, Boys and Girls Weekly, and a host of other publications of the same class circulate freely among young people, and their minds become poisoned by the sensational nonsense gained from these sources. If boys should not poison their bodies with alcohol, why should they blunt their moral sensibility by reading the outrageon follies recounted in the cheap literature of the day, Dangerous as is the use of andent spirits, the victimes of sensational reading are more numerous than those of
