Agricultural Department LIVING ON A FARM. How brightly through the mist of years, My quiet country home appears! My father busy all the day

In plowing corn, or raking hay; My mother, moving with delight Among her milk-pans, silver bright We children just from school set free, Filling the garden with our glee.! The blood of life was flowing warm

When I was living on a farm. I heard the sweet church-going bell As o'er the fields its music fell, 1 see the country neighbors round Gathering neath the pleasant sound; They stop awhile beside the door, To talk the homely matters o'er-The springing corn, the ripening grain And "how we need a little rain," A little sun, would do no harm, We want good weather on the farm." When autumn came, what foy to see

The Gathering of the husking bee, To hear the voices keeping tune, Of girls and boys beneath the moon. To make the golden corn ears bright, More golden in the yellow light, I often turn to those again, And feel life wore its golden charm, When I was living on a farm.

If a hen's spur is hard and the scales on her legs are rough she is old, whether you see her head or not, but her head will corroborate your observation. If the under bill is so stiff that you cannot bend it down and the comb thick and rough, leave her, no matter how fat and plump, for some one less particular. An old goose when alive is known by the rough legs, the strength of the wings particularly at the pinions, the thickness and strength of the bill and fineness of the feathers, and when picked, by the legs the tenderness of pinions and the bill and the coarseness of the skin.

Ducks are distinguished by the same means, but there is the difference that a dockling's bill is much longer in proportion to the breadth of the heal than the old ducks.

METHODS. Methods may be divided into three lasses, general, special, and personal. General methods underlie the whole science of instruction and are for all times. place and persons. They are like the to admit of no proof or discussion. Among them we will stop only to mention a few. Never tell a child what he already knows, or what he can just as well find out for himself. That method is the best that leads the pupil to investigate for himself. Attention must be cultivated as a basis of memory. Obedience is a fundamental law of teaching. In addition to these methods by no means self-evident, to cent,? know which require study, and to use which require practice. Among these higher methods may be mentioned a knowledge of how we think and how our pupils think; what the mind is and how it acts; how to impart knowledge in the fewest words; and how to influence mind and mold character. These belong to the philosophy of education and call forth the very highest young hen has only the rudiments of powers of thought. None but royal teachments of instruction.

Special methods are as numerous as autumn leaves. They increase in every school-room, luxuriate in institutes, and multiply in normal schools. More volumes could be published setting them forth than in any other department of keeping order, securing punctuality, reporting delinquencies, and teaching each branch of study. Some of these ways only chaff and trash. There is nothing ference in size of the wattles of the on which teachers are so self-conceited of the neck and in the elastic shoot and egotistical as their special methods. They will often bore auditors by the hour the direction of Professor Nordenlkiold setting them forth, and some come even to go around the north coast of Liberia to imagine they could revolutionize the as far as Behring Strait, and under favormethods. We must wear our own shoes gave $80,000 from his private purse to while teaching, and not attempt to stumthe skin under the wings, by the ble along in our friend's because they happen to fit him better than ours do us. Each teacher should be a law to himself -should, be himself and not somebody else. Teachers often fail just where some vonng preachers fail. They obtain their A young pigeon is discovered by knowledge second hand. Some teachers, after going to an instigo home with note books crammed full of instructions how to teach. They enter the school-room with the utmost confidence they can apply what they have heard, but they soon, like Darius Green milking stock, but no particular blood | and his flying machine, come down with whose pedigree cannot be traced to such a thump and in such an awful sires who have transmitted their good | plight, they become a laughing stock for qualities through several generations | the whole community and abandon their may, and often does make a good chosen vocation in disgust. It is an undecided question whether the world can get along without whipping. If we cannot eradicate the idea from our teachers that teaching by text-books, from page to page, and page by page is no teaching, we might as well close our school-rooms and devote the school money o some useful purpose. Ask an average pupil a question, and if he cannot remember the words of the book he will reply that he does not-know. Somehow we cannot make some teachers understand that it matters not how much a teacher may know, if he does not know how to teach, he has no business in the school-room. We are everlastingly pounding facts into our young teachers' heads in benighted ignorance of the very plain and common sense fact that they need to learn how to teach, much more than what to teach. It is not true, it never was axioms of mathematics, so self-evident as true, and it never will be true, that what a person knows well himself, he can therefore teach well to others.
