G--: Thanks You twain have beat Kriss Kringle's pranks, on've solved at last the Eastern question, The Old World's bad long indigestion. (Read that last word as two, for fun, So shall you see the wretched pun!) Thile Gortschakoff and old D'Israeli lave beat their brains into a jelly How to fleece the Sublime Porte, We've got the bird and hold the fort. They have their Turkey too, 'tis true, But by a victory they may rue, ecause their bird's too tough to eat. And of the very darkest meat. They won him by a scorvy trick, Played on a man so very sick. That all the doctors could not cure him With British backing to insure him. But these red-wattled birds of freedom iet all the botter as you bleed 'em. And best of all, as I'm a sinner, then trussed, and stuffed, and cooked for royal bird, good friends, indeed, Whose fatness speaks of generous feed defore my eyes a vision passes f hurrying swarms of hoppergrass Fleeing for life, and on their path turkey-gobbler, red with wrath; Along his course they fly in vain. He slays and he devours the slain, And waxes fat and drops his wings, And angry glances sidelong flings, And birds of lesser size and wit Hard on his steps a-crying "quit !" see him stalk in proud disdain Along the sunlit, grassy plain; How proud his strut, what stately stride of carpet knight can ape his pride!

I see him thus, and then again I see him sneaking through the rain, With tail bedraggled and depressed, With shambling gait and lowered crest, Now all the C---'s, and they're not fow, Send Christmas greetings unto you, With wishes that your coming years May swarm with hopes that banish fears May beam with smiles that banish tears. If sorrow's rain shall dim the sheen Of Autumn skies that gleam afar May an unfaltering trust unbear Your hearts triumphant over care,

And may Hope's beacon brightly burn To light your ship on its return.
