[Especial pains will be taken to make the Agricultural Department of the REPORTER of interest and value to the Farmers of Bradford County, by eareful selections from the best Agricultural journals of the country. We should be glad to give the successful results of the labors and experience of our farmers, as to the best methods. of Farming, and invite contributions from those who desire in this way to advance the Agricultural interests of the County.]

Why Farmers Sound be Educated.

There seems to be at the present time a general waking up on the subject of education. The educational lights of the cities are radiating out into the country, and all through the rural districts is beginning to be felt the need of more education. From the report of the Committee on Edu, cation at the late State Grange of Ohio, it would seem that the Patrons of Husbandry are awake to the subject of education. They are demand. and remember that every ing as good schools for the country as they have in the cities. And not NS.... only Patrons, but the whole rural population is becoming interested in better schools. This growing desire elow the cost of manufacture on the part of the farming communi-ained after the present stock must make selections NOW. ty for a higher education, does not upon by inferior work and purchase at the establishment business successfully, as much as it ly located. grow out of a feeling that more book more and be more. It is the out-ATTENDED To. growth of that physical development and growth of brain brought about by comfortable conditions in life and daily out-door exercise. But because science is of but little practical use to the farmer is no reason why he should not be educated. RIAGE FACTORY! The people of the rural districts should be educated.

First, because they are men and women, and as such have an inalienable right to all the learning they can master or obtain. True educatends to increase the sphere of action, and the power to perform the duties of life with justice, honor and integrity. It is knowledge alone that elevates the civilized above the barbarian, and the more knowledge an individual possesses, other conditions being equal, the higher he is TFORM SPRING WAGONS, raised in thought and action, and the better he is prepared to revel in the beauties and the mysteries of the universe, thereby adding to his own material and in the best style, to give perfect satisfaction. happiness and the happiness of all who come within his sphere. Who has a better right to this expansion of mind arising from increased knowledge, and to the happy results arising therefrom, than the tillers of the soil?

Second, farmers should be educated because on them depend the future population and progress of the world. We are told that the population of the cities would die out were it not for the constant influx of population from the country. How important, then, that we educate this influx that is to keep alive those centers of population from which radiate the inteligence and literature that govern the world. Third, farmers should be educated because they are the most numerous and important part of the population of the country. The prosperity of a nation depends on the intelligence of the masses. And not only does the prosperity of a nation depend on the intelligence of the masses, but the freedom of the masses depends on their knowledge. An intelligent people can not be enslaved. Education alone will raise the farming community to that position in the political field to which it is entitled by virtue of its numbers. Education alone will fit them for filling the highest offices of trust and honor, and enable them to take to themselves that share of the governing power that justly belongs to them. J. M. Stolli.

Farming in France. ER PLATED GOODS, THE SMALL-PROPRIETOR SYSTEM THE BASIS OF FRENCH WEALTH. Since the transfer of Alsace and Lorraine to Germany the population of France has been estimated at 36,-000,000. France for the past five RNISHING GOODS! years has been the most prosperous of civilized nations, and her prosperity has not been in the brilliant for-NTERNS, CHIMNEYS! tunes of the showy few, but in the comfortable competence attained by the many. We are apt to think of the French as excelling in the manufactures, especially of the productions requiring artistic skill, and to these superior industries we often attribute their exceptional good fortune through the hard times prevailing all over the world. But the truth appears to be that agriculture is; after all, the basis of their accruing wealth, as it has been of permanent and abik over our assortment, as we are ding welfare in all lands and all times.

Of the 36,000,000 of population as above noted, 21,000,000, or about three-fifths, are agriculturists. The total arable area is estimated at 114,-000,000 acres. This would give an average of 53.5 acres to each individual, or 57 acres to each family of five members.

A farm of 27 acres in this country would be considered rather "small potatoes." In the grain growing regions of the West, the cotton fields of the South, and among the eattle ranches of the Southwest, 27 acres would be counted a garden patch, and not a very large garden at that. But in France these small farms not only support the cultivators' families, but enable them to improve their condition year by year. The rural population raise crops enough for themselves, provide a surplus for the other two-fifths of the community engaged in manufacture and trade, and usually have considerable stores to spare for export beside. How small the shares contributed by each farm must be, is illustrated by the fact that any shortcoming af a crop is more that likely to wipe out the surplus entirely, as for instance, the bad wheat harvest of this year makes all the difference between the export of about 20,000,000 bushels and the imort of nearly as large an amount. But this is only an accident. Uusually the surplus can be counted on with a degree of certainty, and the French farmer is in the long run sure of fair returns for his labor. It is plain to see that the system of agriculture pursued on these miniature plantations must be very different from that in vogue on our broad prairies and wide-spreading valleys; and in view of the substantial results obtained, it may yet be worth our while to learn what the distinctive features of this system are that give success to the farmers of France.

If you are near town, it may be best to buy and draw manure during the winter. Take care of what is made on the farm. Look out for firefang in forse manure. Turn it, or mix it with manure of hogs and cat-
