blown off at a point where the bole was two feet in diameter. Five logs were cut from this tall pine of Morris, four of them being each 12 feet long, and the fifth 14 feet long. The first log was about four feet and seven inches through at the butt. The tree was sound throughout, and there were very few knots in it, the lumber which was cut at James Dennison's mill, being almost entirely clear stuff. A few such trees as that would make a day, the 21st instant, Wallace Costley, youngest son of Mr. Levi Costley, Chatham, while standing in the door his father's house with a loaded gun in his hand, and talking to other persons in the room, accidentally discharged the weapon, killing himself instantly.
