There are many reasons why this mode of securing surplus is preferable. Un- restricted natural swarming is never desirable. If box honey is preferred, perhaps the safest course for begin- ners to follow is to allow one swarm to issue from each stock, and prevent all after-swarms, as this practice will most nearly meet the demands of the average season, giving moder- ate increase, and a fair portion of surplus honey. Hives for swarms should be kept in readiness. When a swarm issues, hive it, and place it at once upon the stand it is to oc- cupy. On the issue of a swarm it is desirable to take one or two combs of brood from the old hive, and after removing all queen cells from these, place them in the new hive that is to receive the swarm. This will usually prevent them from leaving for, the woods. The place of these combs in the old hive should be filled with foundation. About three days after the swarm is hived, the boxes from the old hive, which will usually be partly filled, may be placed upon the new one, where they will be com- pleted much sconer than if left upon the old hive. FREVENTING AFTER-SWARMS. To prevent after-swarms, it will be necessary to supply the old stock	SHREWSBURY CAKE.—One pound four, twelve ounces sugar, one pound butter, five eggs.
