BEWARE of dissipating your powers; strive constantly to concentrate them. Genius thinks it can do whatever it sees others doing, but it is sure to repent of every ill-judged outlay.

CHILDREN should practice filial piety at home, and paternal deference abroad; they should be attentive to their actions, sincere and true in their words, loving all with the whole force of their affection.

THE pleasures of the world are deceitful; they promise more than they give. They trouble us in seeking them; they do not satisfy us when possessing them, and they make us despair in losing them.

COME unto Him, and in His greatness we shall find the enlargement of our littleness; in His tenderness we shall find the softening of our harshness; in His compassion we shall find the lightening of our burden.

INFINITE toil would not enable you to sweep away a mist; but by ascending a little you may often look over it altogether. So it is with our moral improvement. We wrestle fiercely with a vicious habit which would have no hold upon us if we ascended into a higher moral atmosphere.

THE mind and the heart are like a house in which we take lodgers. They may be honest and quiet, or, on the other hand, noisy and destructive, seeking only to spoil the dwelling which receives them. Let us beware, then, of the ideas to which we give hospitality; let us not pick them at random in any book or journal which falls into our hands. Those are ideas which, once admitted, can be dislodged only with great difficulty.

REMEMBER that those who are drunkards did not intend to become so; they only thought of drinking just a little; but that little kept increasing, and the love for drink kept growing stronger, until the eyes grew red, and the face bloated, and the step unsteady; until the one who might have been a blessing to the world and a help to those around him, has become a loathsome object and a terror to his friends. It is not safe even to take a little strong drink, because the love of it soon becomes a harsh and cruel master. War is terrible, and many men have gone to their graves through war, but strong drink has probably carried more victims to the grave than has war, and pestilence and famine. Indeed, many of the victims of war and pestilence are really destroyed by drink. Let all beware of this wide-spaced and terrible curse.
