Yellow and crimson, green and brown

They are whirling past in the fickle blast,

Some to-their branches are clinging stil

As if loth to part with the sweets of life-

And some of a purple blue!

Here is one with a scarlet crown, And one of a safron hue.

And eddying round and round, Catching the eye of the passer-by

With a bravery stout and true,

And some in a sheltered corner lie,

Yellow, and limp, and curled-

Content in their little nooks to die.

A few in a little pool down dropped

Like many a stainless soul on earth,

Dimmed by the toil of years.

Born through repentant tears.

Some taken, some left behind,

Yet grieve with a poet's ear

At the closing of life we lie.

Our own few years may see!

And spare them a passing tear.

And so my pageantry comes and goes;

And in russet-brown or in crimson clad.

THE RAILBOAD SEAT.

There is no relation of life in which the natural selfishness of man comes out so strongly as in traveling. People who, when at home or among their friends, are not only polite, considerate of the comfort of others, but even self-sacrificing in trifles, often become grasping, repellant, morose, when they get on a railroad train to go traveling. Too often they seek their own comfort to the disregard of the rights of others. A man will enter a train and take a whole seat and so arrange his baggage as to cover the whole of it, so as to keep any one else from occupying a part of it. He only pays for one seat, and he knows perfectly well that he has no right to occupy two, and yet he does so frequently, until he is forced to yield, and then he does so with as bad grace as possible. It matters not that other men may be standing up in the cars; he rarely has the grace to invite one of them to sit by him. He sits and looks as forbid-ding as possible, or turns his back and gazes out of the window so as to prevent, if possible, any one from requesting him for a seat beside him. The ladies are in this respect no better than the men, and they are more perfectly masters of the situation. She is protected by her sex in her selfishness and her disregard of the comfort of her sisters. A gentleman does not like to ask her for a seat, though he has a perfect right to do so. Even another lady is at a disadvantage in asking her for a seat. A ally enables her to hold her double seat against all comers. The polite-

While passing through this cave a gentleman discovered a small aperture about six inches in width. Having a pick he broke into this opening, and to his astonishment he discovered a large and airy department. Entering this, he found what appeared to be a stone table beautifully carved. Several stone chairs cold, haughty, insolent manner and an intrenched air of possession usucontinued his search, and at last in a dark corner he found the skeleton of a man. He attempted to raise it from ness of men to women rarely fails in the floor, but though he exerted his solid stone. It is impossible to conjecture who was the hermit or how ong the skeleton has remained hidden away in that silent cave. Burnet (Texas) Bulletin.
