head that'll make it go faster. Yes, higher, and I mean to set it up higher on its wheels nor it is now. Stylisher. Oh, certainly."

"Would it be desirable for it to be higher or go faster for a child's wagon?" "Do you think it would be safe?"

"Oh, certainly, miss. Yes, I reckon you're right. That's so."

"It was extremely clever in you, Waggoner, to think it out," I pursued, relating from criticism to the other day. "It is really remarkable. I'm allays a thinkin' up these here curious notions when I have a spare hour or so. But here's somethin' else, ladies and gentlemen, so to speak—somethin' for the Fourth of July for the youngsters."

"Another wagon?" Lou and Mr. Barrowell and I all laughed together. "Oh, certainly, miss. Yes, miss, sir, one other sits in front, and like my other patent, and off we go. And another youngster sits behind, and presses this here, and that sets these here bells a-ringing! and these here flags a-flyin'! Hail, Columby, miss!"

"Decidedly. Why, Waggoner, this is splendid."

"Oh, certainly, miss. Yes, indeed. That's so, miss."

Mr. Barrowell had walked up to the window to examine yet another patent more minutely. The inventor and exhibitor followed him. Mr. Barrowell asked a number of questions in his easy, cheerful way. It ended in Waggoner's wrapping the patent up in a piece of paper, and in Mr. Barrowell's putting it in his pocket. "We'll see what we can do," he said, as he caught my eye, "as to what you should say, 'Isn't it about time to go?'"

"I queried, when we were out of earshot.

"Poor soul! poor soul! Nothing very practical about him. I have brought away a rather ingenious little conceit. I will take it up to Washington, and know it to a friend of mine there, a patent lawyer. Waggoner may make a few dollars of it."

"Oh, thank you. That is just like you. You are always so good!"

"I'm awfully poor!" I cried, all at once.

"I communicated this possibility to Waggoner when next we met. He always brought my clothes home. He considered that emphatically a gentleman's occupation. 'Certainly, miss,' he liked that of gentlemen's appearances, miss," he averred.

"A day or so afterward I saw Fred. 'That inventive friend of yours is a fraud; he can't cobble worth a cent,' he declared. 'I wasted a dollar and a half on that. That swag wagon is a useless thing. That swag wagon is a colored inventor yet.'"

"Waggoner may be the earliest development of the type."

"I was very interested in your theory," he said.

"That was an uncomforable period, when Fred and I were forever having a difference, first about one thing, then about another. He says now that this fretted him as much as it did me. I liked that of gentlemen's appearances, miss," he averred.

"I brought it over, miss. It's drawn up close to the sidewalk. Will you look at it?"

I went out, accompanied by various friends of the party. The wagon pulled it backward and forward, explaining matters in his eager voice. "I'll show you how it works, miss," he said, finally. He got in, worked a crank up and down, and started off down the street at nearly a break-neck speed.

"It goes beautifully," I said, as I stepped at last, and stood before us, hat in hand, waiting to be congratulated on the success of my invention.

"Oh, certainly, miss. It ain't a bit like a velocipede. It has this here principle different—altogether different. I've been assured by a gentleman who he understands mechanics that there has never been nothin' exactly like this here patent of mine afore."

"Why, Waggoner, that's splendid. You'll make your everlasting fortune."

"Oh, certainly, miss. Yes, I hope so, miss. Won't you try it, miss?"

I mounted the trap, feeling myself somewhat ridiculous, and yet wishing to encourage inventive genius. I moved the crank, as directed, and off I started in the bright moonlight. The wagon rolled on smoothly, and I hunched encouragingly. Some one said I looked like Peggy some one other, who went to some fair or other. "It is a capital thing, Waggoner," I said, having climbed out. "You are a Waggoner by name, and Waggoner by nature, aren't you?"

"Oh, certainly, miss. Yes, miss. You see, miss, I design it especially for children. There ain't but only one seat now for the person at works it, but I mean to put another seat on, and let it up real handy. And I have another notion in my
