ABOUT PRESERVES. - In preserving peaches, pears, plums, etc., says the Hanover Spectator, the amount of sugar to be used depends upon the flavor of the fruit. As a general rule, however, three-quarters of a pound of sugar is sufficient to a pound of fruit. Make your syrup first, by adding a very little water to the sugar, first enough to dissolve it without burning; let it boil, skimming it frequently. till no more scum rises, before putting the fruit iv. If the fruit is very hard, it is best to steam it partially tender before putting it into the syrup. It must be cooked soft enough to stick a straw through it, or it into your jar, that it may not break, and then pour on the boiling syrup. It is best to keep preserves air tight, as it retains
