The speeches were good, and full of common sense, instead of useless mud-slinging in which too many of the speakers of both parties too frequently indulge. They gave their reasons why the people of this country should not, by their votes, put themselves in the control of the Solid South. They thought the main question the South have control of our Ship of State? The Republicans of Smithtleld were never more fully aroused, and they are only waiting until they can show where they stand, not by mere talk, but by the ballot.
