OUTCAST. With weary eyes and matted hair, By streams that shiver dark and deep, Through leafless woods and meadows bare here drear winds roar and sweep.

GOODRICH & HITCHCOCK, Publishers.

For song of birds, and sunlit skies, For iragrant blossoms of the spring, And nooks that violets prize. Through barren valleys, ruin-filled, His footsteps seek the wave-swept sand, Where thick logs rising, damp and chilled,

He hears no sound, bus standing where A high cliff marks a tideless bay, He sees the leaden depths of air Bend over waters gray : A sunless ocean, vast and cold, No sail to break the wide dull hos Of voiceless waves, deliberate rolled Along the rock-bound coast.

The ghostly shadows of the sea Rise up and fill his soul with fear; Dim faces, full of misery, Float by and disappear. He hears the suppliant prayers of those Sad sonts in gloomy regions pent, O'er whom incessant vapor flows, By tempest tossed and sent.

Far on through darkness, lying vast Where old, dead worlds, forgotten long, Float wildly on a stormy blast, He speeds, to find black cliffs, that rise

Through mists that ceaseless fret and toss, And grim ravines where piercing cries Are flung his way across. Now where the drifted snowfields lie, He hears the north winds stormy wrath; Then over deserts hot and dry

Stretches his lonesome path The long years come, the long years go, And pitiless they pass him by; Time has no healing for his woe,

And souls can never die.

ARTIFICIAL LIQUORS. The Agent of a Chemical House Tells How They are Made.

A St. Louis Times reporter was accorded an interview with the agent of a chemical house, who showed him sample-case with the remark that he was the second man, outside of the trade, who ever saw its contents. These liquids were of a variety of colors, and as the case was opened, a heavy and rather offensive odor greeted the reporter's nostrils. It was an indescribable mixture of all sorts of odors,
