The people, after a long and well fought campaign, saw fit to continue the Federal power in the hands of the Republican party. The change, so far as anybody can know at this time, related to men and not to principles...

It is to be noted that the incoming President makes no rash promises. He does, indeed, say in plain language, that the laws must be enforced and every part of the Constitution vitalized by the Federal authority...

He simply says that the whole includes every part, and that a part can never be permitted to dominate the whole. And this has considerable significance because it relates to the old quarrel which began in the Convention which framed the Constitution...

The President recognizes the situation in the South as difficult, and while admitting that universal suffrage has disturbed the relations of the white and colored populations there, the enfranchisement of the freedmen was inevitable...

As regards national finance, the President is in full accord with the present policy of the Government. The credit of the nation is to be maintained, values are to be real and not forced and fictitious, and the debt is to be refunded in accordance with the laws finance based upon centuries of experience...

Now that the Senatorial conflict has ended in a manner satisfactory to nearly everybody it may be profitable to review the little and admit its lesson to memory. He is 'no friend to the Republican party who looks back upon the long and bitter struggle in Harrisburg and dismisses it as an accidental collision. It was no more an accident of politics than the great war of 1861 was an accident. It was made inevitable by ill-advised interference with the people in the discharge of their duties as citizens...

It is to be noted that the incoming President makes no rash promises. He does, indeed, say in plain language, that the laws must be enforced and every part of the Constitution vitalized by the Federal authority. He recognizes the duty of the executive to uphold the supremacy of the nation with a proper recognition to the autonomy of the States...
