THE BATTLE OF THE TCHERNAYA.

Tchernaya, of which we have heretofore had brief-accounts. We copy the following from the London Times: BATTLE OF TCHERNAYA.

Encouraged, it may be, by the arrival of a portion of the Grenadiers, and probably urged on by the impatience of high personages at St. Petersburg, the Russian General determined on an attack on the allied position, and made preparations for many days, with a disregard of caution which revealed his plans, and, but for extraordinary remissness, should have caused their more easy discomfiture.

At last, on the morning of the 16th, the Russians pouring down the steep sides of their position, and favored by the mist, without cry or beat of drum, burst upon the Piedmontese position; driving in the outposts, they reached the Tchernaya, forded the narrow stream, and notwithstanding a heavy fusilade from the Pills, after he had used them for seven weeks and two days, and he now feels better than ever he did in his life. Those Zonaves, rushed upon the allied camp. They and he now feels better than ever he did in his life. Those excellent Buggy, Two-horse Wagon, Ploughs and the serious frame of the stomach and excellent Buggy, Two-horse Wagon, Ploughs flank with a desperate bayonet charge, and a hot contest ensued, in which Gen. D'Herbil-1 on, with 10,000 men, had to sustain the attack of the Russians, who probably by this time had brought a much larger force into ac-

The first rush did not last more than ten minutes. The Russians fell back, but they had scarcely gone a few hundred yards when they were met by the second column, which was advancing a pas de charge to support the LANDIS to Miss SUSANNAH SPANGLER, both of Adams minutes. The Russians fell back, but they first, and both united and again rushed torward. This second attempt was more successful than the first. At the bridge they forded the river on the right and left, and forced the defenders on the right and left, and forced the defenders of it to fall back; scarcely was the bridge free, when two guns of the Fifth Light Brigade of Artillery crossed it and took up a position on the other side in an open space which divides two of the hillocks, and through which the roads lead to the plain of Balaklava.-While those two guns passed the bridge, a third crossed the river by a ford, and all three began to sweep the road and the heights.

The intantry, in the meantime, without waiting for the portable bridges, rushed breast deep into the water, climbed up the embankment, and began to scale the heights on both sides. They succeeded on this point in getting up more than one half of the ascent, where the dead and wounded afterwards showed clearly the mark which they had reached; but by the time they arrived there the French were fully prepared, and met them in the most gallant style. Notwithstanding the exertions and the perseverance of the Russians, they were, by degrees, forced back, and driven, after an obstinate resistance, across the bridge, carrying away their guns.

While this attack took place on the bridge the other column again attacked the French right. This time they came on in such a - swarm that they were neither kept back by the aqueduct nor cowed by the Sardinian guns, which were plowing long lanes through their scattered lines. On they came, as it seemed, irresistible, and rushed up the steep hill with such fury that the Zouaves, who lined the sides of it, were obliged to fall back for a moment before the multitude. You could plantly see the officers leading the way and animating their soldiers. I particularly observed one gallant fellow who, at least twenty yards in advance of the whole column, was the first across the aqueduct, and I could still see him on the side of the hill. This furious rush brought the advancing column in an increaibly short time to the crest of the hillock, where it stopped to form.

But the French had not been idle during the time that the Russians were ascending the hill .- The Zouaves had only fallen back from the side of the hillock to the main body, which had been drawn up behind the top. Scarcely did the column of the enemy show its head. when the guns opened on it with grape, and a murderous fire was poured down upon it by the French infantry. This immediately stopped the advance of the column, which began to waver, but the impetus from those behind was so powerful that the head of it, notwithstanding the unexpected reception, was pushed forward a few yards more, when the French, giving one mighty cheer, rushed upon the advancing enemy, who, shaken already, immediately turned round and ran down, if possible, faster than they had come up. But the mass was so great that all the hurry could not save them, and more than 200 prisoners were taken on the spot, while the hillside, the banks of the aqueduct, the aqueduct itself. and the river side were filled with dead and wounded. The Sardinian and French artillery poured, moreover, a murderous crossfire into the scattered remains of the column, of which scarcely a shot missed. It was a com- to that date. plete rout. The French rushed down the hillside and drove them faracross the plain. The defeat seems to have so completely cowed them that nothing more was attempted against this side. Not so on the bridge. Notwithstanding the heavy loss suffered by the second attack, the Russians concentrated once more all their forces, collected the scattered remains of the the largest and handsomest assortment of Milcolumn which had been routed on the right of linery Goods, in this city-consisting in part the French position, and brought up all their of Bonnet Silks, Ribbons, Velvets, Fancy Feareserves to attempt one more attack. They thers, Flowers, Laces, &c., which will be again crossed the river, and the aqueduct too, and tried to take the heights-but in vain; the French were now thoroughly prepared, and the tenacity of the Russians served only to augment their losses. They were soon flying in all directions, followed by the French. This first attack was decisive, and immediately the usual Russian preparation for retreatnamely, the advance of the artillery-showed clearly that the Russians acknowledged themselves deleated, and were on the point of re-

Everybody now rushed to the battlefield. and one look was sufficient to convince them that the allies had won a real battle on the Tchernaya .- Although not quite so obstinate and sanguinary as the battle of Inkermann. which this affair resembled in many points, it was a pitched battle. On the banks of the nqueduct particularly the sight was appalling; kinds .- Blankets and Flannels .- Linen and the Russians, when scaling the embankment of the aqueduct, were taken in flank by the Goods .- Cloths, Cassimeres and Vestings. Sardinian batteries, and the dead and wounded rolled down the embankment, sometimes more than twenty feet in height. The French made every possible despatch to collect the wounded. They were laid on the open space about the bridge until the ambulances arrived .-While there the Russians, who could see plainly that the French were engaged in bringing help to their own wretched countrymen. suddenly began to open with their guns upon them, repeating the barbarous practice which they had already often previously shown to the

Holloway's Pills, an unfailing Remedy for all disorders of the Chest and Langs.—Oliver Thompson, of Little Falls, New York, was certainly in a most deplorable state of health ten weeks ago; his lungs, so the doctors told him, were complétely gone, his chest, and in fact his body generally, had scarcely an atom of flesh on it, so thin had he become. In addition to this, he had a count which some become. In addition to this, he had a cough which com-pletely shook him to pieces (these are his own words); he has just called on Professor Holloway to inform him, that
