From the Harrisburg Patriot & Union. "Look on this Picture, and then on That."

was never surpassed by any body of men who ed its labors in harmony, and closed them with an unanimity and enthusiasm which elicited general admiration. Every member seemed to be actuated by the same spirit—a desire to promote the interests of the party, by placing in nomination a ticket which would command the respect, and secure the support, of the whole party, as well as thousands of honest Whigs, who, disgusted with the principles and practices of the dark-lantern order, have determined hereafter to identify themselves with the great Democratic party. And well did the members of that Convention perform their work. They have given us a ticket which even the Know Nothing press admit is a good one. They have selected for Delegates to the Cincinnati Convention, as well as for Electors, men of ability and worth, who at the proper time will discharge their duties with credit to themselves and to the party which they represent. What a thrilling scene it was, when the able President of the Convention, Hon. HEND-RICE B. WRIGHT, in his address, exclaimed :-"And here is the Democratic party of Pennsylvania-God knows I am proud to look upon you!" Every delegate must have felt proud of his connexion with such a body, and every one must have been inspired with a determination to enter into the approaching campaignso important to our country—with a zeal commensurate with its importance. There was no wrangling in that Convention-no scenes calculated to disgrace the party whose interests the adjournment, the proceedings were characterized by ability, discretion, and unanimity. May it be an example for similar bodies for all

Now look upon another picture—we mean the late National (?) Know Nothing Convention, in Philadelphia. It met with but two fixed principles—proscription of Catholics and opposition to foreigners—and one of these was otic exertions of the women of the Umited States. sensation in western Pennsylvania. set aside, for a time, so as to admit to a scat the Catholic delegation from Louisiana. While the members of the Democratic State Convention were not divided by any questions of a local or national character, the Know Nothing Convention contained pro-slavery and antislavery delegates-persons in favor and persons opposed to a secret organization—some for and others against making a nomination for President at that time-Law men, (many of whom, paradoxical as it may seem, were lawless enough,) FILLMORE men, HOUSTON men, M'CLEAN men, and others who knew not whom they preferred—really and positively Know Nothings. How could it be possible that among such a heterogeneous mass-whose creed was proscriptive to the last degree - anything approaching harmony could dwell? It was not, and we were therefore not surprised to find, in the reports of the proceedings which appeared in their own papers, scenes recorded, in which all participated -even ministers of the gospel-which would have disgraced a body of bacchanalians. It is well for Democrats, and it would be well for the opponents of the Democratic party, to look at the contrast presented in the objects, the deliberations, and, the results of the two Conventions. The effect of proper reflection, it seems to us, would almost necessarily lead right-minded and intelligent men to embrace the principles of the party that will always be, as it has always been, the progressive and only useful party of the

From the Hagerstown Mail.

The Know Nothings were very much afraid of the power of the Pope. They proclaimed their hostility to everybody who owed him allegiance, of any kind, whether civil or ecclesiastical. They argued that all Roman Catholies did acknowledge allegiance to him, which was incompatible with their duties to their country. That was for "Buncombe." They thought that an unreasoning prejudice against Catholics existed in the minds of a majority of the American people, which they could take advantage of, and so ride into power.

Well, this provoked a storm of indignation. The people remembered that their fathers had framed a constitution which prohibited all religious tests.

Then, being very loth to give up the weapon which they thought the Protestant prejudice placed in their hands, they discovered a distinguou without a difference between Catholics; called a part of them Gallicans, and told the people that they were "sound on the goose question," and the rest of the Catholics were rotten to the core.

That was a rather clever dodge, if the people had been fools enough to believe it. It was rayther cunning to make every one who joined their order, pledge himself to "use his vote and influence, without regard to party considerations, to prevent the election of any Roman Catholic; and to tell old fogies who talked about the Constitution, a cock-and-a-bull story about Gallican Catholics.

But "that cock wouldn't fight." Quite a number of the "intensely" patriotic members of their party let the cat out of the bag, by refusing to admit the Louisiana Delegation into their convention, because they were Catho. John J. Leiper, lies. After a vast amount of gas was expended, they were informally admitted; that is, without credentials. Now, to get out of the dilemma into which !

their manifest inconsistency has thrown them, the Fillmore papers are arguing that the Louisiana delegation were Gallicans!

If they were Gallicans, and therefore eligible, why didn't the convention admit them formally on that ground! Where was the necessity for such a David D.-Wagener, "waipping the devil round a stump" as admitting them "without credentials ?"

From the opening to passing the "home and grave of Washington." This is a beautiful coincidence, taken in connection with the holy purpose of Mr. El's visit to this city, in response to the call of the "Ladies of the Union," to raise his eloquent voice

It is also a most gratifying circumstance that yesterday both Houses of the General Assembly passed, by acclamation, the ladies' bill

The bill, we believe, merely incorporates the Ladies' Mount Vernon Association of the Union. Previous to its passage a deputation of ladies appeared in the Senate chamber, when the bill was taken up and passed unanimously. It was then sent to the House, and passed immediately, but two votes being against it.

According to a list published, of the battles fought during the year 1855, between the Russian and Allied armies, beginning with the bombardment of Shanghai by the French, at which one hundred fell, and ending with the fall of Kars, at which twenty-six hundred fell, it appears that seventy-three engagements occurred during the year, or more than one for each week, with an average loss of more than a thousand men killed in each. The list does not include those who perished by disease, or in skirmishes, nor the wounded, disabled, those who died in the hospitals, or were irreparably maimed, or missing, or prisoners.-The number left dead on the field usually comprises only about one-fourth of the entire loss in a battle. By this rule, the entire number swept out of existence by the war of 1855, must have reached over 300,000 men. No year, since that of Waterloo, has presented so bloody a record. If it were asked what has been gained by this enormous sacrifice of human life, the answer must be-nothing.-

Remarkable Murder Trial.

The Corrigan murder trial, in Westmoreland

Corrigan is an old man, of some sixty or seventy years of age. His wife disappeared on the 29th of September last, and has never been heard from since. Four or five days after, some bones and part of a skull, declared by were found by some neighbors in a large fire which had been burning near Corrigan's residence, in the open field. Corrigan had been observed stirring it, at unusual hours. A sinell came from the fire like that of an animal carcass burning. A button similar to those worn upon a woman's night dress was found in the fire, and also one belonging to a man.—
Considerable blood was found in different parts of Corrigan's house, although evident attempts had been made to conceal it. All of the woman's dresses that she was known to have were found at home, in their usual place.-This indicated that she had not gone away vol-

A person passing Corrigan's house, on the night she was last seen, heard screams coming from that quarter. A sled, having marks of blood, was found near the house, with tracks showing that it had been evidently dragged in the night time, by a horse, near to the fire where the bones were found. Corrigan and his wife, who lived alone, were known to quarrel. He gives no satisfactory explanation of any of these circumstances. He pretends that he gave his wife money to go to Philadelphia with, and that the bones found in the fire were old bones, scraped up in rubbish which he was burning on his farin. But this is rendered mprobable by the strong animal smell which came from the fire.

After a trial of several days, and speeches both for and against the prisoner by able counse', he was convicted of murder in the first degree and sentenced to be hung: No body was ever found or identified as that of his wife.

The supposition of the jury was from the evidence, that Corrigan had murdered his wife, then conveyed her body to the fire in which the bones were found, upon the sled that was lying near his residence. The circumstances seem to be strong in that direction. The disposition for securing Mount Vernon to the State of Vir- the murderer made of the body is most horriginia, and rescuing it from the grasp of specu- ble, almost as much so as Professor Webster, his victim into pieces, and then burnt them in a grate in his room. COOKING WITHOUT FIRE .- The last invention is a plan for cooking without fire, described in the Scientific American. The invention is a combination of tin cooking dishes, placed one above another, the bottom of one vessel fitting on the top part of the dish below. In the lower dish of all, a small quantity of quicklime is placed, and then, by means of a tube cold water is introduced upon the lime. Chemical action generates intense heat, whereby the articles on the dishes are quickly cooked, ready for the table.
