Kellow Fever at Rio.—The bark Nameaug, the crows of northern vessels trading there escape an attack of the postilence. The crew of the Nameaug were all taken with the disease and sent to the hospital, which rendered it necessary for the captain to ship a new crew before he could sail. Some of the vessels, finding the pestilence raging, took in cargo and put to sea, hoping thereby to escape the scourge; but, alas, they were not out many days before they were obliged to put back again with all hands disabled or dead with vellow fever.
