

Joint Stock Manufacturers.

Until recently we never were fully impressed with the fact, that our Iron City was so really deficient in the production of the finer articles of iron ware; yet, nevertheless, such is the case, and the term "Pittsburgh Manufactures" will convey the idea of the coarser and heavier kinds of goods; for, notwithstanding our unexcelled facilities for manufacturing and distributing our products, we have chiefly manufactured only those articles on which the cost of transportation gave us an advantage over the East, in addition to those other advantages, which, in comparison with ours, are locally in the Union possessor.

We have been content to purchase nearly all else in the East or in Europe, and although we talk much of enterprise, and although we have many little enterprises, we have shown very little in the matter of establishing manufactures of those finer goods, in which labor is the chief element of value. We have been satisfied to sell our iron at an average of 8 to 10 cts. per pound, and to buy of Old and New England many articles of the same material at from 50 cts. to $5 per pound, the difference going entirely to pay the wages of labor and the profits of the capitalists. Now, this is all wrong, and we believe our community is waking up to the fact. We are glad to see substantial indications that, in many years Pittsburgh will be as famous for the manufacture of all finer articles of convenience and elegance, as it now is for those of price necessity.

It is the plain duty of all those having an interest in the growth and prosperity of Pittsburgh to encourage and foster the establishment of every new branch of manufacture in our midst which promises to develop her resources, and to add to her wealth and fame. To the Legislature, at the recent session, enacted a general law for the incorporation of manufacturing companies, similar in its provisions to those under which the New England people have built up their manufacturing villages and cities, and the fortunes of the enterprising citizen, and the establishment of every new branch of manufacture in our midst which promises to develop her resources, and to add to her wealth and fame.

constitutional, and ought not to be tolerated. The sovereignty of Virginia, though in rebellion, was as sacred under the Constitution as ever, and the Constitution protected the vested rights of her citizens as well in rebellion as before it. The confederate laws were unconstitutional and ought not to be submitted to. The South will not and cannot come back under these laws.

It is not difficult to classify that fellow; yet such are the teachings which pass for democracy in Indiana. John B. Eden, another M. C. from Illinois, spoke.

He said he had never seen such a gathering as this one before, and he could now go home and tell the Democracy of Illinois that the Democrats of Indiana were alive and firm for the Union. He had known no platform since the war but the Constitution; and what had brought this civil war upon the country was the departure from the Constitution by the Administration and Congress in the emancipation proclamation issued by the President, and the passage of the Liberty Bells and confiscation act of Congress.

Mr. Eden had succeeded admirably in setting himself down as an ass. Some one in the crowd now called for three cheers for Abe Lincoln, which were given by the crowd on the right of the stand with a perfect hurrah.

Mr. Voorhees remarked: "These men do not belong to our party." The chairman now introduced Thomas A. Hendricks, who commenced by glorifying the Democratic party, asserting that it had always been right and was right now. Some one in the crowd shouted: "That is a hell of a way to support the Government."

Some of the orators attempted to strike the party who had spoken, when a man named. A squad of infantry came forward to quell the disturbance, and the speaking party was quickly handed out of the park to a cavalryman, who hurried him off to place of confinement. This incident rather scared the speaker, and he suggested that the resolutions had better be read at once. He then commenced the question of slavery, saying that it was left to each State to settle that matter in its own way. Mr. Hendricks kept his eyes on the right of the stand, expecting to see a rush made toward the platform, and his speech was therefore discontinued.

There was a good deal of excitement in the crowd, and some one rushed on the platform and said they were coming to arrest Mr. Voorhees. Several of Voorhees' friends stepped forward and remarked, "Let them come; we are ready for them; and now there was no danger. They would not attempt to arrest him in so conspicuous a place.

It was a false alarm; but Mr. Hendricks, although frightened, was obliged to continue speaking until the Committee on resolutions should be prepared to report. Finally all was ready, and the report was read. The preamble was long, made up of a series of platitudes and citations from the Constitution. We give the first resolution as a sample of the lot:

Resolved, That, as the people are the source of all political authority, and the rights appointed by law are the servants of the people; and that when any one of these servants assumes to act without the sanction of such authority, he ceases to be the servant of the people, and is striving to become their master.

No sooner were the resolutions adopted than the Chairman declared the meeting adjourned sine die, apparently glad that it was over.

Some one in the crowd now proposed three cheers for the adjournment, and three cheers for Abraham Lincoln, and three for the Constitution. Mr. Voorhees then gave with spirit from a thousand voices.

Mr. Doran now mounted the stand. He said he did not know whether he should be considered discourteous in him to address the meeting after it had been adjourned. He just wanted to say that there were some prominent men on the stand, to-day, who, when coming to the meeting, hurried for Jeff Davis. Several of the speakers wished to call the attention of those present to the fact that while all the speakers denounced the Government, they were not one word of complaint to make against Jeff Davis or the rebel Government. He continued to speak until he was interrupted by a candidate for Speaker, subject to the decision of the next Union Convention.

because they are the soldiers of the Government. Yet these poor ignorant people, who armed themselves to go to a party gathering, and like cowards as they were, fired from running trains upon peaceful dwellings, might have been as loyal as it was possible for such debased minds to be anything had it not been that their passions were inflamed, and their feeble intellects debauched by their rascally leaders.
