WEDNESDAY MORNING, JUNE 3.

The Progress of the War.

An advance movement on the part of Gen. LEE is still talked of, but what the nature of that movement may be is yet, so far as anything has publicly transpired, an impenetrable mystery. The rebels ostentatiously proclaim that his intention is to advance upon the North, and invade Maryland and Pennsylvania. This, we think, is the strongest evidence that he intends to do nothing of the kind. Were that his real intention, he is too good a soldier to blow a trumpet before him.

Another question is pressing painfully upon the mind of the country, and that is, has Gen. HOOKER sufficient force to cope with LEE should they meet in a general engagement? There are conflicting reports and estimates on this point. Some think that large detachments have been sent to the West, while others contend that heavy reinforcements have been gathered in from the Carolinas and elsewhere. It is impossible to ascertain what is true. If it be true, as some accounts allege, that the rebel army has recently been making a great show of strength, then we may take it for granted that detachments have gone west, where the fortunes of war are pressing the Confederates most sorely. Our impression is that the great issues of the conflict are drawing westward; and it may be that Vicksburg will yet be the Waterloo of this war. Every day adds something to the force in the rear of GRANT, and renders his situation more perilous. But GRANT is in a better situation for receiving reinforcements than JOHNSTON; and unless he succeeds in capturing the city very soon, the battle there is likely to grow into one of tremendous magnitude.

The absence of Gen. BANKS from New Orleans, with the greater part of his forces, leaves that important city not as secure as could be desired. The gunboats on the river are mainly relied upon to hold it; and it is very certain that the national forces there have the power either to rule or ruin—to hold it, or burn it. Our forces there have not fortified it on the land side; and if the rebels should decide upon the destruction of the city, rather than that it should be held by the Yankees, it is perhaps in their power to effect it.

Certain it is that the permanent loss of New Orleans and of the Mississippi must be fatal to the Confederacy; for it would deprive it not only of half its territory, but expose it around all its borders, to the hostile power of the Union. Deprived of that river and of all that is west of it, the rebel armies would be obliged to fall back to the mountains, and be cut off from their only reliable source of supply, the fertile regions lying to the west of the mountains. This being so, we may rest assured that the rebel leaders will put forth every effort to retrieve their losses in the Southwest.

A later telegram brings us a report, through rebel sources, that Vicksburg has been taken, and we are inclined to believe it, notwithstanding it rests upon poor authority. It was impossible that it could long hold out against the tremendous engineery of war that was bearing upon it, both from the land and the water; and the defence made by its garrison—obstinate even to madness—can only be accounted for on the ground of the hope they entertained of being relieved by JOHNSTON, from the rear.

Another report, also through rebel channels, announces the capture of Fort Morgan—one of the old United States forts at the entrance of Mobile Bay, which was siezed by the Secessionists before the breaking out of the war. This, if true, is a very important achievement, and is the first step towards the reduction of that important city. If we have indeed taken Vicksburg and Fort Morgan, we may hope for an early and triumphant termination of the war.

Secretary Seward and the Troops.

On Friday last, the 19th N. Y. S. V. were mustered out of the service at Auburn. They were addressed by Mr. Seward, who was making a brief visit to his home. We quote a portion of his speech:

Civil war divides the community, even in those places where the government retains its accustomed strength and authority, into two classes. One that has courge adequate to the crisis, the other that has not. Those that have the courage, in other words the virtue, adequate to the crisis rush to the field.

In this large assemblage which has come out to greet you, or to witness this solemn ceremony of your discharge from the public service, both these classes are found. We cannot distinguish, nor is it worth our while to attempt to distinguish the one from the other. By their actions hereafter they shall be known. Those who are wise and virtuous will be found urging you to return to the field, and persevere until the battle is won, and will spare no pains, going themselves, if possible, to recruit the ranks which death honorably met has decimated. Those who are otherwise will be found still cavilling about the causes of the war, about the responsibilities of its unavoidable defeats, about the distribution of honors for the victories gloriously won; they will be found accumulating treasure with one hand and storing it away from the tax gatherer with the other, that they may enjoy it after the patriotism and heroism of better men than themselves have secured the triumph which will enable them to enjoy it in safety.

To the young men, who I see around me I have to say it is for you to choose to which of these two classes of the community you will attach yourselves. If you are prepared to join the former the greeting you give to these our brave neighbors returned from the field, are as honorable to you as gratifying to them. If, on the other hand, you think more of your lives, more of your fortunes, more of your personal expectations than you think of your country, your salutations are a mockery, and the sight of these war-worn veterans ought to strike you with confusion and shame.

Mr. Seward closed these pungent remarks by saying that if he was within the age and the conditions of service he would not have appeared on that "occasion unless it was to take up the firelock that one of those our honored neighbors has now come to lay down. I love the man that will not suffer his name to be written upon the register of the Provost Marshal. It is bad enough to be balloted for as a candidate for a civil office. An honest and loyal man, however, must submit to that sometimes. On the contrary, my neighbors and countrymen should never have a chance to cast lots over me as a conscript, so long as they should leave me at liberty to volunteer."

He said:

In my childhood I followed with love and veneration the steps of the Heroes of the Revolution. I saw that love and veneration become the universal sentiment of the American people, so far that he who had differed from them or opposed them or denied the homage of his respect was deemed unworthy to be an American citizen. Such love and veneration begin to cluster upon you to-day, and they will continue till they reach such a hight that when the humblest of you finds his last resting place, here or elsewhere, under the restored and complete authority of our glorious National Union, his son will be deemed to have in his father's fame an inheritance richer than the treasure that can be transmitted to his heirs by the wealthiest among us. Our posterity will look out for heirs of the soldier and cover them with the gratitude which the father's life-time was too brief to exhaust.

INTELLIGENCE from Utah up to the 10th of May has been received. The Grand Jury for the United States District Court adjourned without taking any action in the matter of Brigham Young's arrest for polygamy. The whole subject was treated as a matter for jest.

SEMPLE CLAY. St. LOUIS, MO.

Having accepted the Agency for the sale of the SEMPLE CLAY, mined near St. Louis, Mo., I invite the attention of Glass and Steel Manufacturers to the Analysis given above as reported by Profs. A. A. Hayes, of Boston, and J. C. Booth, of Philadelphia, which, together with the test of actual experience by manufacturers in Pittsburgh, Cincinnati and St. Louis, determines it to be the purest and most valuable Clay now known, whether Foreign or American. For use in from it have stood in the Glass Furnaces from 6½ to 9 months.

The Analysis is of the Clay as taken from the mine, without any washing or preparation whatever. It possesses great adhesiveness and plasticity qualities, which are not shown by the Analysis, and which admit of the admixture of a large proportion of shell or burned clay.

I am now prepared to fill orders for the above Clay, to be shipped from St. Louis or delivered here.
