Bradbury, in the said firm, he is now prepared to supply the increased demand for his celebrated Piano-Fortes. Employing the most skillful and experienced workmen, with a large stock of the best and most thoroughly seasoned material, and an abundance of capital, he has taken in hand the personal superintendence of the whole business of manufacturing his instruments, and is enabled to turn out Piano-Fortes of unequalled tone and excellence.

Vicksburg.

According to the dispatches from Pemberton to Johnston, which the bearer of them brought direct to Gen. Grant, Pemberton says that his forage was all gone, his men were on quarter rations, and his ammunition nearly exhausted,—but still he could hold out ten days longer. This period, fixed by Pemberton himself, was up on Sunday, and if nothing of an adverse nature has occurred, we have every ground to believe that Pemberton, having exhausted his means of protracting the siege, would surrender, when no relief from Johnston, or any other quarter, had appeared before that, the extreme term of possible endurance. A day or two, therefore, may well bring us the good news we have so long and anxiously waited for.

—Speaking of this dispatch from Pemberton to Johnston, the New York Times remarks:

Some of the statements in this dispatch are corroborated by facts already in our knowledge—such as the running out of mules from Vicksburg and the shooting of horses. If Pemberton was so hard up for supplies, however, we think he made a mistake in running out his mules; for, killed and salted, they would have made good victual in a strait. At the siege of Derry and at many another historical siege, this resource was drawn upon. Have these mules meat. Pemberton's stupidity in this respect rather confirms the Southern story that he is a traitor—not to say an ass.

It is rather likely that the rebels will find it hard to forage on our lines when they reach the point of desperation. But Grant is fully prepared for this, and has abundant force well posted to meet them. We hope that before the close of the week Vicksburg and Port Hudson will be ours, and the whole line of the Mississippi river.

The Fall of Puebla.

It can no longer be doubted that the heroic defenders of Puebla, after sustaining a siege of fifty-three days, have been obliged to succumb to the superior skill and artillery of the French. In the last great assault not a single gun was fired from the two principal Mexican forts, Guadalupe and Loretto.

Gen. Forey having selected as his ground of attack the part of the city which is an opposite direction to the above-named fortresses, compelled Gen. Ortega to move with the bulk of his army on that point, and to confine his operations in a circle in which the fire of these forts would be of no assistance whatever to him, or to the forces fighting under him.

It seems that Gen. Ortega was gradually hemmed in within that area of the city, surrounded from the north to the south-west by a circle of fortresses, which he had to defend, one after the other; the guns of Guadalupe and Loretto, therefore, could not have been directed against the assailants without injuring both the city and his soldiers.

Napoleon will now be able to "dictate the terms of peace"—that phrase will satisfy the pride of the 'Grand Nation'—at the capital of Mexico; and we think he will be glad of the opportunity to retire with what a Frenchman would call honor. He entered upon that business with a grand scheme of extending his empire over that part of the American continent, and of becoming the dominating power in a region which, from its geographical position, could be made the key of the Western hemisphere. But the state of Europe is very different now from what it was when he entered upon that enterprise. "Thieves out of the East and out of the North are troubling him;" and he will be glad of the opportunity to make any terms with Mexico, so as to leave him free to deal with the terrible events which are coming upon Europe —perhaps upon France. The French people are filled with apprehension, and almost wild with excitement on the Polish question. "Oh!" every one exclaims, says a letter from Paris, "if the Mexican business were only terminated!" The fall of Puebla may, therefore, be the salvation of Mexico.

From Vicksburg.

A special dispatch from Cairo to the Chicago Tribune, sent on the evening of the 7th, gives the following:

The steamer Alice Dean, Capt. Pepper, bringing Vicksburg dates to Thursday, and Memphis dates to yesterday afternoon, arrived here this evening. An officer of the Alice Dean reports everything progressing as usual, at the rear of Vicksburg. The sappers and miners are still burrowing in the hillside. The gunboats and mortar boats are still operating. New siege guns opened fire on Thursday as had been anticipated, but with what result is not ascertained. The sharpshooters still commanded the rebel works in the rear, and the Confederates are not allowed to show their heads without becoming targets for one hundred rifles.

The general position of Grant's army remains unchanged. The advanced regiments are being daily relieved and fresh ones substituted. Osterhaus is at Big Black River, to hold Joe Johnston in check should he attempt it. Johnston's force is supposed to be not over 10,000 reliable fighting men, but he is reported to have 20,000 conscripts of all ages at Mutaw, Miss., and about the same number near Jackson.

Deserters report the rebels in the besieged city as reduced to one ration per day, consisting of three cones, and greatly demoralised in other respects.

Another dispatch, of the same date and place, says:

Gen. McClernand, it is reported, has been put under arrest for disobedience to orders, and Gen. Washburne ordered below to take command of his division.

We have the report from rebel sources that an expedition up the Combahee river, South Carolina, has carried off 1,000 negroes and destroyed property to the amount of $1,000,000. The Combahee flows along the northern border of Beaufort district, through a section of the State densely populated with negroes. The authority which we quote does not mention the commander or composition of the troops, but it is doubtless the one commanded by Col. Jeanison, which left Port Royal two or three weeks since. It was made up of loyal South Carolina (colored) soldiers, and without question did good work. The rebel telegrams likewise state that Hudson, South Carolina, the post village in Beaufort district, had been set on fire by our troops, though they claim that the invaders were driven back.

Strength of the Rebel Position at Port Hudson.

While the lower rebel stronghold at Port Hudson almost equally divides, with the upper one at Vicksburg, the interest and anxiety of the country, we think the following statement of the nature and strength of the former position will be of considerable interest to our readers. It is given in the St. Louis Republican of a recent date:

Port Hudson is about twenty-five miles above Baton Rouge, on the east side of the Mississippi. It is at a point where a bend forms almost a right angle, thus completely commanding the river both ways. On the north, for a distance of eight miles, it is protected by an impassable swamp, which is bounded on the side nearest Port Hudson by Thompson's Creek, the higher bank of which is a precipitous bluff, crowned by an intrenched abattis.

This abattis extends from the river eastward, till it joins a series of intrenchments nine or ten miles in extent, sweeping to the south in a semi-circle till they rest upon the river on the crest of a range of high hills. The country in the rear is rolling, and possesses many natural advantages in favor of the enemy. Between Baton Rouge and Port Hudson, is a long stretch of territory difficult of access at all times, being covered by dense woods and undergrowth, and abounding in bayous and marshes. The place, both by nature and art, is unquestionably one of great strength. The Southern people in the vicinity call it their Gibraltar, and profess to believe it to be impregnable.

The water defenses of Port Hudson are said to consist of eight batteries, numbering between twenty and thirty guns. One of these batteries is stationed on a bluff eighty feet high. Another is planted just below the mouth of Thompson's creek. The most of the guns are 74's, 32's and 42's, but there are one or two 120-pounders. The land defenses were chiefly built after the advance of the Union forces to Baton Rouge. They mount in all some thirty or forty guns, some of them of heavy calibre; and in addition to these there are at least four field batteries, which can be readily moved to any part of the works. The position seems to be entirely inclosed in a series of fortifications of the most elaborate and formidable character, but whether there are any interior lines remains to be revealed. The probability, however, is that the rebels would scarcely rely on a single line, and that the exterior intrenchments include several others, as was found to be the case at Vicksburg. Indeed, the general plan of the defenses at Port Hudson appears to be the same as at the point just mentioned, the only deviations being such as required by the variations in the surface of the country.

Port Hudson District is commanded by Major-General Franklin Gardner, a veteran soldier and an able officer, who was assigned to duty there on the 27th of December last. A portion of his staff is as follows:

Lieut. Alex Dupre, Aid-de-Camp; Lieut. T. P. Wilton, A. A. A.; Capt J. H. Spratley, A. Q. M.; Capt. John J. Wheadon, A. C. S.; and Lieut. R. M. Rodgers, ordnance officer.

The troops of the post were until recently, if they are not now, under command of Gen. Beal.

How Louisiana Slaves Receive our Troops.

A correspondent with the army of General Banks, describing the march through western Louisiana, furnishes some interesting facts in reference to the reception of our troops by the slaves. Everywhere, he says, "they flocked out to welcome us," and are in exstasies over their freedom. "They give us (all particulars as to the sentiments and history of their masters, and in other ways manifest their friendship, acting as if they could not do enough for us. One of the songs which they are in habit of singing runs as follows:

"Massa run away, ha, ha!
Nigger bound to stay, ho, ho!
I tink dat now de Kingdom come,
Dat dis de year ob Jubilo!"

At Williams' plantation, five miles from Alexandria, and Alexandria, at Cherryville, Moranville, Enterprise, Simmsport and other villages, the negroes joined our forces by scores and hundreds. At the Atchafalaya river, as the army was marching toward the Mississippi, they came in droves with wagons, horses and other property. One company came in on an immense flat-boat which was crowded with their goods; the whole under the command of a shrewd negro, who had evidently been, at some time, an officer's servant.

Our correspondent says that every slave in that region knows all about the proclamation. They understand perfectly well that they are free, and are always ready to give up everything they have for the benefit of our troops. The latter have come to understand this; they find that wherever they encamp on a plantation the "fat of the land" is at their service, including such luxuries as chickens, fresh and salt pork, new potatoes, hot corn bread, fowls, fresh milk, &c., and under these bounding appeals of the race which looks up still with hope and faith, the last remnant of prejudice is removed from the army, and every man is prepared to welcome to the ranks those people who come with gifts in their hands and love in their hearts.

Rebel Movements.

We suppose all the thousand rumors concerning the late movements of the rebel army, may be considered set at rest by the facts developed on the daring reconnoissance to the south bank of the Rappahannock, on Friday last. It was fully ascertained that the rebel army was gone, with the exception of a few of whom I was well acquainted. Seven of them were mills men. They first stripped them of everything but their shirts, placed them together with their backs toward them, and shot them nearly all to pieces, leaving their bodies on the ground. The same company then passed on north of Stoddert, and shot two citizens, then to the house of Elder Obadiah Smith, an old Baptist preacher that I have known for twenty years, and shot him with eighteen balls. They took from his dead body about three hundred dollars, and threw the empty purse in his wife's face.

No person or property is safe here unless that of a copperhead. The Government does not molest these, and of course the pro-slavery Democrats let them alone.

SOUTHERN BARBARISM.—A Cairo dispatch, of June 7, says: Some 200 refugees arrived here to-day from Memphis, gathered from Mississippi and Tennessee. The commander at Jackson, Tennessee, consigned them to Gen. Buford, having sent them by way of Memphis. They are Union men, women and children, in a destitute condition. Gen. Buford has sent them to the Soldiers' Home, temporarily awaiting orders for their final disposition. They will be treated kindly as long as in his camp, and it is hoped may speedily find a refuge suited to their condition.

THE Chattanooga Rebel has nominated Valandingham for the next Governor of Ohio. It is believed the Convention which meets in Columbus on the 11th inst. will ratify the nomination. Nothing could be more natural.—Cincinnati Commercial.

THE New Haven Journal says that Admiral Foote has, as yet, no knowledge of his appointment to the command of the South Atlantic Squadron.
