The News.

If the dispatches we expect to receive before going to press, shall confirm the expectations fairly raised by Gen. MEADE'S dispatch of Friday evening, and the proclamation of the President which followed it on Saturday morning, we shall have had a glorious and memorable Fourth of July! We make no reference to the dispatches from Baltimore and Harrisburg—though the latter, as based on intelligence received by Gov. CURTIN, ought to have at least a semi-official character, and afford us more satisfactory evidence of what has been done than the ordinary flying reports from the battle field telegraphed to the sensation newspapers in the eastern cities. Evidently neither the report from Harrisburg nor that from Baltimore can be reliable, for both state such numbers of prisoners as Gen. MEADE could have known nothing about, when he wrote his dispatch on Friday evening. But the intelligence received by Gov. CURTIN may be later—and refer to later results—than the Baltimore dispatch of Saturday.

One of our dispatches mentions that a rebel mail had been captured, and a letter from Jeff. Davis to Gen. Lee found, in which it was stated that no more troops could be sent from Richmond, as that city was seriously threatened. We have already, several days ago, called attention to the fact that an expedition had been fitted out by Gen. DIX, and was on its way to Richmond. We also copied some extracts from articles in the Richmond newspapers, showing that the rebels themselves had found out that something disagreeable to them was going on—or rather coming on—in that direction. The following from the Richmond Sentinel, of June 25th, the latest which has reached us, we add to-day. It is only a little more definite in stating matter of fact—not more indicative of the feeling of alarm—than some that went before it:

Lincoln seems, indeed, in earnest about giving us another view of his banners from the heights of Rockmond; a great deal more earnest, we are sorry to say, than are those who have had the hand the management of the organization of our citizens to assist in home defense. Now that the enemy are unquestionably landing in considerable force both at Brandon, on the James, and at the White House, on the Pamunky, there is that commotion among us which is due to the circumstances. Instead of being ready for our work—every man knowing his captain and his rally-point and signal—we are now to present the spectacle of an excited rush, meeting to organize when the enemy is at our doors.

If MEADE cannot capture LEE and his army north of the Potomac, which completeness of victory would perhaps be more than any reasonable calculation of probabilities could warrant us in looking for, when he succeeds in driving them, a broken and dispirited remnant, back into Virginia, to find no city of refuge—no capital of the "Confederacy"—there any longer, what can the leaders of the great conspiracy do—whither can they turn—to retrieve their fallen fortunes—fallen so irretrievably low?

The Rebel Position in Tennessee.

On Wednesday, July 1st, General Rosecrans took possession of Tullahoma, Bragg having evacuated on Tuesday night. From the fact that his army made good its escape, and left but little property of any kind behind, we may infer that he had previously determined not to give battle at that place. The enemy have fallen back to Chattanooga. One portion of his army took the road to Winchester. Our forces were in full pursuit, and General Rosecrans telegraphs that General Thomas would flank the retreating column on Wednesday. If Bragg succeeds in getting to Chattanooga without a battle, he can fight to better advantage than at Tullahoma, it being a stronger place for defense, and further from our base. In retreating he has abandoned a very productive portion of Tennessee; and he would not, we presume, have made this sacrifice, had he been confident of his ability to cope with the Army of the Cumberland. We learn from some extracts telegraphed from late Chattanooga papers, that considerable alarm was felt for the safety of that country; and that great reliance was placed upon the militia recently called out in Tennessee, Georgia and Alabama. It also appears that Burnside was believed to be advancing from Kentucky with thirty thousand men. Altogether the rebel position in Tennessee, according to their own showing, is an uneasy one.

From Vicksburg.

The following letter from a correspondent of the Cincinnati Commercial gives the following interesting account of the progress and position of affairs at Vicksburg:

WALNUT HILL, IN REAR OF VICKSBURG, June 24, 1863.

I see that H. Greely is getting uneasy and nervous, and desires "Grant's" removal. Won't some good friend advise him to keep his shirt on? Your announcement of May 25th, that Vicksburg is ours, is far true as preaching; it is ours as true as the sun rises and sets; the occupation of it is only a question of time. To say the truth, the occupation of Vicksburg is a thing not to be ardently desired at present; on the contrary, there are two advantages to be derived by the Government from the rebels remaining there. First—they serve as a sort of bait to induce an attack from the rebel General Johnston, which will allow old "Unconditional" another opportunity to gobble up a batch or two of them. Second—while they are virtually prisoners, they subsist themselves at a much cheaper rate than we could subsist them; and here permit me to express our admiration for their fortitude in persisting in living on half rations of mule meat and very indifferent cornbread, when the only and final result will prove a matter of economy to the Federal Government.

If any one supposes that General Grant occupies anything like a perilous position here, he is very much mistaken. It would be impossible for him to occupy a stronger position in the Southern Confederacy. We have no rear; the army is formed in a circle—front, rear with one right and left flanks resting on the Yazoo above, and the Mississippi river below the doomed city.

Our forces are all available, the supplies being admitted from the right and left flanks of the army between the lines, requiring no extra troops to protect our trains. Now you see that an army of 100,000, in the position we hold, is equal to an army of 150,000 under any ordinary circumstances. Johnston, Bragg, or any other man, had better be in h—l than to attack us with less than 100 000 men; perhaps you will imagine that if we are attacked in our rear front, that the prisoners will out. But I wish it distinctly understood that if they try that on they have got fourteen miles to cut, and then they just reach our strongest line, which fronts on Black river.

We occupy a very comfortable position here on the bluffs—plenty of water and delightful air, which is conducive of good health and spirits, of which the army is enjoying abundantly.

Grant has got a wire from one end of the line to the other, a distance of about twelve miles. Thus, you see, he can communicate instantly with any point on the line.

An Impartial View of the Position.

There are some, even among ourselves, who think that the war has not only been unnecessarily protracted, but who have persuaded themselves that nothing has yet been gained by it. Such is not the opinion, however, of the London Daily News—a close observer of events in this country, and, though friendly to the North, of remarkable independence and solidity of judgment. In the number for May 19th, it takes this view of our military progress:

It is said every day that the North had better abandon the contest as hopeless, and sue for peace. But any one who will take the trouble to look at the map and to compare the position of the North at the beginning of the war with the position they now occupy, may readily convince himself that the grounds for such advice are not military or historical.

It is an undoubted fact that the South have never recovered one inch of the ground which they have once lost. What the North have once gained they retain. For a moment the Southern armies regained the Northern side of the Potomac, but it was only for a moment. And now, whilst the whole of Western Virginia is in the hands of the Federals, the half of Eastern Virginia is in the same position. Passing down the eastern coast, Fortress Monroe on the north side, and Norfolk as well as Suffolk on the south side of the James river, completely control the entrance to Richmond. In the Carolinas the Islands and estuaries are still held by northern troops; nor have the South succeeded in compelling the North to abandon their hold of Florida. In the Gulf of Mexico, with the exception of Mobile, the North hold complete command. The loss of New Orleans was probably the heaviest blow sustained by the South, and now Banks is in possession of a large district on both sides of the great river.

For a time it seemed doubtful whether the North would be able to possess themselves of that part of the river which lies between Port Hudson and Vicksburg; but the exploits of Porter and Farragut have practically resolved this doubt in its favor. The Confederate States are absolutely divided. The gigantic confederacy of slaveholders which threatened to establish its power from the eastern seaboard to the Pacific is now an impossibility. As to the border States of Kentucky and Tennessee, the Confederates are still unable to drive Rosecrans back from Murfreesboro; and the Federals are even now in possession of Tuscumbia, on the borders of Alabama.

Thus it appears that the only States which now remain in the undisputed possession of the Confederates are the two Carolinas, Georgia and Alabama. How is it possible that these four States should constitute an Independent power?

Any one who looks to their population, their wealth, and the peculiarity of their position, must admit it to to be impossible.

But it appears that the South are exposed to a special danger which it seems difficult, if not impossible, to ward off. The only mode by which the South can be enable to maintain their position against the North has been by the railroads. The extent of the country is so great, that without such means of communication it would be impossible to move the troops with sufficient rapidity to meet the attacks of the enemy. It is obvious that if the North obtains the command of the sea and are able to maintain their railroads, whilst the South are still excluded from the sea and loss their railroads, they must be put under terrible disadvantage. Now it is asserted upon trustworthy authority, that the railroads in the South are wearing out, and that the scarcity of iron makes it difficult to repair them. If this be so, the difficulty suggested has already come upon the South. But over and above this there are difficulties as to the supply of food, which have already proved almost dangerous at Richmond, and which may yet prove more serious.

Upon the whole, therefore, it appears that so far from the North having any reason for despondency, the result of the struggle has been distinctly in their favor, and is daily becoming more so.

This was written before anything had been known of the stupendous movements of Grant, or of the probable fall of both Vicksburg and Port Hudson. Nor does the writer declare the real magnitude and importance of Gen. Banks's conquests in Louisiana, which were probably not reported to him at the time. He omits, moreover, all mention of what we have accomplished in Missouri, Arkansas and the western territories, and has nothing to say of the fact that Maryland, which it was necessary to hold at one time by force of arms, is now among the most loyal States in the Union. More prodigious conquests, in truth, were never before made in such a short space of time.

—We had made the above extract some time ago from one of the leading liberal journals of England, which has been a steady friend of the Union cause from the beginning, and through some oversight it now comes under the head of 'deferred matter,'—but still it is well worthy of consideration by all that large class of our countrymen, who are so well characterized and satirized in the pleasant saying of a witty traveler, in which he assures the world that Americans are a people who 'expect everything to be done in twenty minutes!' When the rebellion broke out, one of our most distinguished statesmen was prompt to take up the "burden of prophecy," and tell us that our little domestic difficulty would be all settled within 'sixty days.' And most of us have been more than once, since, rapt into similar visions of a speedy return of the halcyon days of peace, with no better warrant for realisation, than the over-sanguine temperament and over-exacting temper, which our invariable and unparalleled successes and triumphs in the arts of peace had nourished in us. We think history—the impartial judgment of the after-ages—will, on a calm review of the whole field of action, from the vantage-ground it will occupy, coincide with the friendly English writer, whose views are expressed above, rather than with those who have uttered despondent and harsh words of reproach and criticism, because results were not attainable as speedily as their impatience of hope had made them expect.

If we can rely on the accounts we have received of the splendid proportions of General MEADE'S victory over LEE, how much more laight be added to the sum of work done today! So much, may we not say, that it will all soon be done.

THE firm of S. Hallett & Co. have been appointed by General Fremont, President of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, eastern division, its financial agents; and for securing the speedy construction of the road, it is stated that General Fremont has deposited with them two millions of dollars, or their equivalent, to be used as they may deem best calculated to secure that object.

Booth, of Philadelphia, which, together with the test of actual experience by manufacturers in Pittsburgh, Cincinnati and St. Louis, determines it to be the purest and most valuable Clay now known, whether Foreign or American. Pots made from it have stood in the Glass Furnace from 6¼ to 9 months.
The Analyst in charge of the Clays as taken from the mines, without any washing or preparation what ever. It possesses great adhesiveness and plasticity qualities which are not shown by the Analysis, and which admit of the admixture of large proportion of sand or burned clay.
I am now prepared to fill orders for the above Clay, to be shipped from St. Louis or delivered here.

DIXON'S

AROMATIC BLACKBERRY CARMINATIVE,

THE SOVEREIGN REMEDY FOR

DISENTERY, DIARRHEA, FLUX, CHOLERA MORBUS AND SUMMER COMPLAINT.

The immense sales testify to the merits of this truly valuable remedy.
The numerous daily reports of astonishing cures all attest its value.
It is the strongest cordial ever offered for curing the diseases, and imparting tone and strength to the system.
It acts safe, harmless to the infant, and powerful in the adult case.
To the soldier, especially, it is invaluable, being as properly termed by them, in many certificates,

"The Soldiers' Friend."

Mothers find it superior to any soothing syrup for children teething, freed from the injurious effects of NARCOTICS, giving rest to the sufferer by removing the disease.
Sold by respectable dealers everywhere.
Price, 25 CENTS A BOTTLE.
