

Pittsburgh Gazette.

TUESDAY MORNING, JULY 21.

The True Criminals.

We have seen nothing in the way of effort, that will compare with the treatment of the question of the late riots by its responsible authors—the copperhead press of New York. Instead of skulking into darkness, and calling upon the rocks and mountains to cover them, they very coolly turn upon the loyal newspapers and say: "See there, what you have done! This is all your work! We told you this would be the consequence of your teaching!" But this is precisely in keeping with the language of the traitors who were, all along having tried to win from the people from the South, by threatening the slaves and hundreds of thousands of iron and brave and patient men were found to undertake the entire work—to bear the burden and heat of the day, which was near close.

Oh, how brightly, thanks to their labors and long endurance, and the Divine blessing which has crowned all they did and suffered—how brightly now the roses of glory promises to flower under western skies—soon, soon to reappear streaming through the portals of the east, the auroral robes of the angel commissioned to usher in the golden hours of the coming day—one of long enduring and ever-blessed peace.

The Pittsburgh Post and the Constitution.

The Pittsburgh Post of yesterday, has an article full of the most vindictive copperhead venom—full of the most dastardly lying and characterized by the most dastardly spirit of a renegade colonel.

The Post gives the "rap to Oberurs" from the hands of the slaveholders with all the avidity of that or any other hungry monster.

But the Post has played its card of treason when all the chances of affecting the game are over and gone. We do not say, however, that it held it too long in hand, for there never has been an opportunity in the history of our country, so far as we know, when the Post, or any other newspaper, has been so openly and shamelessly pro-Southern as at present.

While we recognize, however, the necessity of representing such outbreaks with a strong hand, it is always to be regretted when the punishment falls only on the head of the ignorant and deluded masses—the blind dupes and instruments of the wickedness of worse but wiser men. There is a Nemesis in these cases which would have brought home a "bloody instruction" to the trading aristocracy of power who fostered these disturbances by their encroachments of such newspapers as the Herald, World and News, if they had not fortunately for them, been checked in their incipient stage. The actual victims are the poorest and most ignorant classes, as well as the innocent as the depraved, while the true aristocrats, others of these inconsiderate, and their aristocratic patrons, are allowed to go unscathed, though both equally guilty. There ought to be some remedy for this. If the friends of order had completed their work by cleaning out these nurseries and magazines of treason, and of all the crimes which it engenders, and dealt with their proprietors just as they dealt with their less guilty instruments, they would have extirpated the cause of offense by striking at its root. What is the use or justice of shooting down the murderers on the streets, while the more cowardly assassins, who shun behind a wall and instigate and inflame him to deeds of blood and rapine, is allowed to escape unharmed, and to continue his work? He cannot say that he did not mediate murder, or arson, or burglary, when he organized revolt. These results are natural and inevitable sequences, and he ought to answer for them as fully as though his own delicate hands were dyed with the blood which he has caused to be shed by others.

It is not to doubt that this opposition to the draft was got up by the conspirators, in the interests of the rebellion. Seward's speech to the mob shows that he was advised of it. It was so used as to correspond with the invasion of the North. If that invasion had resulted in even a temporary success of our armies, there is no telling what might have been its consequence. The dark hours of the nation have been precisely those in which treason has issued from its lurking place on its strand of murder. God, in his mercy, willed it otherwise, by crowning our arms with unprecedented victories, both in the East and West, and strengthening the hands of the Government, and inspiring the heart of the President with courage to meet the issues by a stern refusal to yield even a particle of ground.

As though published just as an article in the news-edition Slavery, etc., etc.

But though published just as an article in the news-edition Slavery, etc., etc., etc., it may be that the failure of Lee's part in the war, and, if possible, to reach the final object of the conspirators, who are still in existence, will be due to the fact that they have not succeeded in getting something better in point of ability and style.

It will be seen that it can have no effect here, except that of showing how ridiculous that particular party, falsely called Democratic, with open and armed rebels, presume to show themselves everywhere. Everywhere, we say, for whom such an article as that referred to is ventured in the face of the loyal sentiment of this community, what will not such a sheet as this do to the reputation of our schools, and to the character and conduct of our teachers?

It is not to doubt that the conspirators, who are still in existence, will be due to the fact that they have not succeeded in getting something better in point of ability and style.

It will be seen that it can have no effect here, except that of showing how ridiculous that

particular party, falsely called Democratic, with open and armed rebels, presume to show themselves everywhere. Everywhere, we say, for whom such an article as that referred to is ventured in the face of the loyal sentiment of this community, what will not such a sheet as this do to the reputation of our schools, and to the character and conduct of our teachers?

It is not to doubt that this opposition to the draft was got up by the conspirators, in the interests of the rebellion. Seward's speech to the mob shows that he was advised of it. It was so used as to correspond with the invasion of the North. If that invasion had resulted in even a temporary success of our armies, there is no telling what might have been its consequence. The dark hours of the nation have been precisely those in which treason has issued from its lurking place on its strand of murder. God, in his mercy, willed it otherwise, by crowning our arms with unprecedented victories, both in the East and West, and strengthening the hands of the Government, and inspiring the heart of the President with courage to meet the issues by a stern refusal to yield even a particle of ground.

As though published just as an article in the news-edition Slavery, etc., etc., etc., etc.

But though published just as an article in the news-edition Slavery, etc., etc., etc., etc., it may be that the failure of Lee's part in the war, and, if possible, to reach the final object of the conspirators, who are still in existence, will be due to the fact that they have not succeeded in getting something better in point of ability and style.

It will be seen that it can have no effect here, except that of showing how ridiculous that

particular party, falsely called Democratic, with open and armed rebels, presume to show themselves everywhere. Everywhere, we say, for whom such an article as that referred to is ventured in the face of the loyal sentiment of this community, what will not such a sheet as this do to the reputation of our schools, and to the character and conduct of our teachers?

It is not to doubt that the conspirators, who are still in existence, will be due to the fact that they have not succeeded in getting something better in point of ability and style.

It will be seen that it can have no effect here, except that of showing how ridiculous that

particular party, falsely called Democratic, with open and armed rebels, presume to show themselves everywhere. Everywhere, we say, for whom such an article as that referred to is ventured in the face of the loyal sentiment of this community, what will not such a sheet as this do to the reputation of our schools, and to the character and conduct of our teachers?

It is not to doubt that this opposition to the draft was got up by the conspirators, in the interests of the rebellion. Seward's speech to the mob shows that he was advised of it. It was so used as to correspond with the invasion of the North. If that invasion had resulted in even a temporary success of our armies, there is no telling what might have been its consequence. The dark hours of the nation have been precisely those in which treason has issued from its lurking place on its strand of murder. God, in his mercy, willed it otherwise, by crowning our arms with unprecedented victories, both in the East and West, and strengthening the hands of the Government, and inspiring the heart of the President with courage to meet the issues by a stern refusal to yield even a particle of ground.

As though published just as an article in the news-edition Slavery, etc., etc., etc., etc., etc.

But though published just as an article in the news-edition Slavery, etc., etc., etc., etc., etc., it may be that the failure of Lee's part in the war, and, if possible, to reach the final object of the conspirators, who are still in existence, will be due to the fact that they have not succeeded in getting something better in point of ability and style.

It will be seen that it can have no effect here, except that of showing how ridiculous that particular party, falsely called Democratic, with open and armed rebels, presume to show themselves everywhere. Everywhere, we say, for whom such an article as that referred to is ventured in the face of the loyal sentiment of this community, what will not such a sheet as this do to the reputation of our schools, and to the character and conduct of our teachers?

It is not to doubt that the conspirators, who are still in existence, will be due to the fact that they have not succeeded in getting something better in point of ability and style.

It will be seen that it can have no effect here, except that of showing how ridiculous that

particular party, falsely called Democratic, with open and armed rebels, presume to show themselves everywhere. Everywhere, we say, for whom such an article as that referred to is ventured in the face of the loyal sentiment of this community, what will not such a sheet as this do to the reputation of our schools, and to the character and conduct of our teachers?

It is not to doubt that this opposition to the draft was got up by the conspirators, in the interests of the rebellion. Seward's speech to the mob shows that he was advised of it. It was so used as to correspond with the invasion of the North. If that invasion had resulted in even a temporary success of our armies, there is no telling what might have been its consequence. The dark hours of the nation have been precisely those in which treason has issued from its lurking place on its strand of murder. God, in his mercy, willed it otherwise, by crowning our arms with unprecedented victories, both in the East and West, and strengthening the hands of the Government, and inspiring the heart of the President with courage to meet the issues by a stern refusal to yield even a particle of ground.

As though published just as an article in the news-edition Slavery, etc., etc., etc., etc., etc., etc.

But though published just as an article in the news-edition Slavery, etc., etc., etc., etc., etc., etc., it may be that the failure of Lee's part in the war, and, if possible, to reach the final object of the conspirators, who are still in existence, will be due to the fact that they have not succeeded in getting something better in point of ability and style.

It will be seen that it can have no effect here, except that of showing how ridiculous that particular party, falsely called Democratic, with open and armed rebels, presume to show themselves everywhere. Everywhere, we say, for whom such an article as that referred to is ventured in the face of the loyal sentiment of this community, what will not such a sheet as this do to the reputation of our schools, and to the character and conduct of our teachers?

It is not to doubt that the conspirators, who are still in existence, will be due to the fact that they have not succeeded in getting something better in point of ability and style.

It will be seen that it can have no effect here, except that of showing how ridiculous that

particular party, falsely called Democratic, with open and armed rebels, presume to show themselves everywhere. Everywhere, we say, for whom such an article as that referred to is ventured in the face of the loyal sentiment of this community, what will not such a sheet as this do to the reputation of our schools, and to the character and conduct of our teachers?

It is not to doubt that this opposition to the draft was got up by the conspirators, in the interests of the rebellion. Seward's speech to the mob shows that he was advised of it. It was so used as to correspond with the invasion of the North. If that invasion had resulted in even a temporary success of our armies, there is no telling what might have been its consequence. The dark hours of the nation have been precisely those in which treason has issued from its lurking place on its strand of murder. God, in his mercy, willed it otherwise, by crowning our arms with unprecedented victories, both in the East and West, and strengthening the hands of the Government, and inspiring the heart of the President with courage to meet the issues by a stern refusal to yield even a particle of ground.

As though published just as an article in the news-edition Slavery, etc., etc., etc., etc., etc., etc., etc.

But though published just as an article in the news-edition Slavery, etc., etc., etc., etc., etc., etc., etc., it may be that the failure of Lee's part in the war, and, if possible, to reach the final object of the conspirators, who are still in existence, will be due to the fact that they have not succeeded in getting something better in point of ability and style.

It will be seen that it can have no effect here, except that of showing how ridiculous that particular party, falsely called Democratic, with open and armed rebels, presume to show themselves everywhere. Everywhere, we say, for whom such an article as that referred to is ventured in the face of the loyal sentiment of this community, what will not such a sheet as this do to the reputation of our schools, and to the character and conduct of our teachers?

It is not to doubt that the conspirators, who are still in existence, will be due to the fact that they have not succeeded in getting something better in point of ability and style.

It will be seen that it can have no effect here, except that of showing how ridiculous that

particular party, falsely called Democratic, with open and armed rebels, presume to show themselves everywhere. Everywhere, we say, for whom such an article as that referred to is ventured in the face of the loyal sentiment of this community, what will not such a sheet as this do to the reputation of our schools, and to the character and conduct of our teachers?

It is not to doubt that this opposition to the draft was got up by the conspirators, in the interests of the rebellion. Seward's speech to the mob shows that he was advised of it. It was so used as to correspond with the invasion of the North. If that invasion had resulted in even a temporary success of our armies, there is no telling what might have been its consequence. The dark hours of the nation have been precisely those in which treason has issued from its lurking place on its strand of murder. God, in his mercy, willed it otherwise, by crowning our arms with unprecedented victories, both in the East and West, and strengthening the hands of the Government, and inspiring the heart of the President with courage to meet the issues by a stern refusal to yield even a particle of ground.

As though published just as an article in the news-edition Slavery, etc., etc., etc., etc., etc., etc., etc., etc.

But though published just as an article in the news-edition Slavery, etc., etc., etc., etc., etc., etc., etc., etc., it may be that the failure of Lee's part in the war, and, if possible, to reach the final object of the conspirators, who are still in existence, will be due to the fact that they have not succeeded in getting something better in point of ability and style.

It will be seen that it can have no effect here, except that of showing how ridiculous that particular party, falsely called Democratic, with open and armed rebels, presume to show themselves everywhere. Everywhere, we say, for whom such an article as that referred to is ventured in the face of the loyal sentiment of this community, what will not such a sheet as this do to the reputation of our schools, and to the character and conduct of our teachers?

It is not to doubt that the conspirators, who are still in existence, will be due to the fact that they have not succeeded in getting something better in point of ability and style.

It will be seen that it can have no effect here, except that of showing how ridiculous that

particular party, falsely called Democratic, with open and armed rebels, presume to show themselves everywhere. Everywhere, we say, for whom such an article as that referred to is ventured in the face of the loyal sentiment of this community, what will not such a sheet as this do to the reputation of our schools, and to the character and conduct of our teachers?

It is not to doubt that this opposition to the draft was got up by the conspirators, in the interests of the rebellion. Seward's speech to the mob shows that he was advised of it. It was so used as to correspond with the invasion of the North. If that invasion had resulted in even a temporary success of our armies, there is no telling what might have been its consequence. The dark hours of the nation have been precisely those in which treason has issued from its lurking place on its strand of murder. God, in his mercy, willed it otherwise, by crowning our arms with unprecedented victories, both in the East and West, and strengthening the hands of the Government, and inspiring the heart of the President with courage to meet the issues by a stern refusal to yield even a particle of ground.

As though published just as an article in the news-edition Slavery, etc., etc., etc., etc., etc., etc., etc., etc., etc.

But though published just as an article in the news-edition Slavery, etc., etc., etc., etc., etc., etc., etc., etc., etc., it may be that the failure of Lee's part in the war, and, if possible, to reach the final object of the conspirators, who are still in existence, will be due to the fact that they have not succeeded in getting something better in point of ability and style.

It will be seen that it can have no effect here, except that of showing how ridiculous that particular party, falsely called Democratic, with open and armed rebels, presume to show themselves everywhere. Everywhere, we say, for whom such an article as that referred to is ventured in the face of the loyal sentiment of this community, what will not such a sheet as this do to the reputation of our schools, and to the character and conduct of our teachers?

It is not to doubt that the conspirators, who are still in existence, will be due to the fact that they have not succeeded in getting something better in point of ability and style.

It will be seen that it can have no effect here, except that of showing how ridiculous that

particular party, falsely called Democratic, with open and armed rebels, presume to show themselves everywhere. Everywhere, we say, for whom such an article as that referred to is ventured in the face of the loyal sentiment of this community, what will not such a sheet as this do to the reputation of our schools, and to the character and conduct of our teachers?

It is not to doubt that this opposition to the draft was got up by the conspirators, in the interests of the rebellion. Seward's speech to the mob shows that he was advised of it. It was so used as to correspond with the invasion of the North. If that invasion had resulted in even a temporary success of our armies, there is no telling what might have been its consequence. The dark hours of the nation have been precisely those in which treason has issued from its lurking place on its strand of murder. God, in his mercy, willed it otherwise, by crowning our arms with unprecedented victories, both in the East and West, and strengthening the hands of the Government, and inspiring the heart of the President with courage to meet the issues by a stern refusal to yield even a particle of ground.

As though published just as an article in the news-edition Slavery, etc., etc., etc., etc., etc., etc., etc., etc., etc., etc.

But though published just as an article in the news-edition Slavery, etc., it may be that the failure of Lee's part in the war, and, if possible, to reach the final object of the conspirators, who are still in existence, will be due to the fact that they have not succeeded in getting something better in point of ability and style.

It will be seen that it can have no effect here, except that of showing how ridiculous that particular party, falsely called Democratic, with open and armed rebels, presume to show themselves everywhere. Everywhere, we say, for whom such an article as that referred to is ventured in the face of the loyal sentiment of this community, what will not such a sheet as this do to the reputation of our schools, and to the character and conduct of our teachers?

It is not to doubt that the conspirators, who are still in existence, will be due to the fact that they have not succeeded in getting something better in point of ability and style.

It will be seen that it can have no effect here, except that of showing how ridiculous that

particular party, falsely called Democratic, with open and armed rebels, presume to show themselves everywhere. Everywhere, we say, for whom such an article as that referred to is ventured in the face of the loyal sentiment of this community, what will not such a sheet as this do to the reputation of our schools, and to the character and conduct of our teachers?

It is not to doubt that this opposition to the draft was got up by the conspirators, in the interests of the rebellion. Seward's speech to the mob shows that he was advised of it. It was so used as to correspond with the invasion of the North. If that invasion had resulted in even a temporary success of our armies, there is no telling what might have been its consequence. The dark hours of the nation have been precisely those in which treason has issued from its lurking place on its strand of murder. God, in his mercy, willed it otherwise, by crowning our arms with unprecedented victories, both in the East and West, and strengthening the hands of the Government, and inspiring the heart of the President with courage to meet the issues by a stern refusal to yield even a particle of ground.

As though published just as an article in the news-edition Slavery, etc., etc.

But though published just as an article in the news-edition Slavery, etc., it may be that the failure of Lee's part in the war, and, if possible, to reach the final object of the conspirators, who are still in existence, will be due to the fact that they have not succeeded in getting something better in point of ability and style.

It will be seen that it can have no effect here, except that of showing how ridiculous that particular party, falsely called Democratic, with open and armed rebels, presume to show themselves everywhere.