

Political Effects of the Legislation of 1862.

We have already stated the effect of the legislation of 1861 upon the fortunes of the Republican party, as shown by the elections of that year. Let us now examine its influence—strengthened and reinforced as it was by the events of the session of 1862—upon the political contest which followed the close of the campaign.

The House Committee did find, as we have already stated, that the Tonnage Tax Law was procured by corrupt and illegal means, and that the officers of the Company had either evaded the process of the House or declined to testify. The House had previously reported the law by adverse vote.

The Speakers of both houses—one of whom was a candidate for re-election in the coming year—were both Democrats. The Senator from Bradford county, a man of undoubted abilities and unusual eloquence, who had abandoned his opposition to that question, in the face of the most public and solemn pledges, was elected to the Senate.

From what we can learn, MORAN entered upon his duties on Saturday night at or near the town of Richmond, in Jefferson county, Ohio, about six miles north of the river at Stenberville. It is reported that on Sunday morning he pushed on towards the river, but meeting a spirited opposition there, he took the road leading towards New Lisbon.

JOHN SULLIVAN died at Washington, July 16th, at the age of 81. Mr. Sullivan was formerly a member of the House, and a Director of the United States Bank, and an inflexible opponent of Mr. Bidwell, and supporter of the Union cause.

The Capture of Gen. Morgan.

The military career of MORAN, the notorious guerrilla chief, has at length been brought to a sudden close, and since he is now a prisoner in our hands we shall hear more of him as a rebel leader.

Several dispatches were received in this city yesterday (Sunday) announcing his capture with his staff and the balance of his command. One of these is a dispatch from Gen. BOOZOS, commanding the department.

Dr. Massie in Philadelphia.

On Thursday evening, a large meeting of clergymen was held at Old Pine-street Church, Philadelphia, to listen to an address from Rev. Dr. Massie, of London, on the subject of British and French sympathy respecting the war for the Union.

Dr. Massie, who is a member of the Society of Friends, and a member of the British and Foreign Bible Society, addressed the meeting on the subject of the war for the Union.
