Woodward and Curtin, and Ourselves.

Our remarks about the Woodward speech in apology for the rebellion, seems to have touched the Post upon the raw. Its answer is, that the speech was made on the 13th of December, and four months before the rebellion broke out; and this it thinks is a triumphant one. It cannot, however, escape in that way. South Carolina was already out, and the other Cotton States threatening to follow her example, and just at this particular juncture, when a little encouragement only was required, and STEPHENS, of Georgia, was insisting at home that there was nothing to complain of, Judge Woodward made his speech to show how much they had been injured, and what abundant reason they all had for cutting loose from the Union. What difference did it make whether Sumter had then been fired upon or not? Apologies for crime are not meant to pave the way for its commission, and the guilt is only the greater, when the apology precedes the act which it has encouraged. Judge WOODWARD's speech was, no doubt, used by way of answer to STEPHENS, for the purpose of showing the States still holding back, that they were deeply injured, and ought to secede, and might secede with impunity.

The Post excuses the candidate, however, by informing us that the meeting was called by the conservative citizens, and presided over by a Republican Mayor, and that the speech was made at the urgent solicitation of "leading citizens," and "applauded by all who wished to avoid the bloody civil war that is now upon us."

Whether it was so called and organized or not, can make no difference, if the speech itself was a destructive one. We should like to know, however, the name of the "leading citizen," who could have had so little sense or loyalty, as to ask a man of his opinions to speak at all on such an occasion—or the names of the men who wished to avoid a civil war, that applauded an effusion so traitorous in itself, and so well calculated to bring it on. We think we can say, from what we know from people who were there, that there was no truly loyal man within the hearing of that speech, who was not sickened and disgusted by it.

But the way to settle this matter is to give us the speech, and allow it to be judged by itself. We have tried in vain to get our hands on it. We doubt, however, whether the Post will venture to republish it just now, but we shall take its refusal as a confession that it was all we have said of it.

Inasmuch, however, as the Post refers to some of our remarks in relation to the public acts of Governor CURTIN, we take occasion to say, that while the matters mainly objected by us are precisely those which are denied by such of its coadjutors as the Greensburgh Republican, and which it will not venture to publish or affirm itself, even with all the temptations which a desire for party success may offer to it, there is no amount of objection which can be imagined against Governor CURTIN, that could render him half so obnoxious or dangerous, at a time like this, as a man like GEORGE W. WOODWARD. If it were a question of personal honesty only, the conduct of the latter in the Allegheny Bond cases, wherein he presided as a judge, while he was personally interested in securities of the same kind, would have stamped him with an infamy equal to that of Jeffries himself. But with his record upon the question of the war and the known opinions of the convention which nominated him, we can imagin no greater calamity to the Union, and to ourselves as a State, than the election of such a man as Governor, at a crisis so full of danger as the present. If our objections to the renomination of Governor CURTIN had been tenfold greater, we would rather have taken him, with all his faults, than an undisguised apologist of the rebellion, whose success would not only imperil the Republic, but perhaps involve it in a bloody war at home, like that inaugurated by Governor SEYMOUR in New York, and so happily checked at the outset by the valor of a loyal police, and the armed intervention of the Government troops. A merely local Administration the most unsatisfactory in its economic conduct and policy, if unconditionally pledged to contribute its aid to the active and earnest prosecution of the war, without pause or respite, or negotiation, so long as there was a rebel in arms within our territory—would be a small evil in the comparison, with one prepared, like BRADBURY the Copperhead candidate in Maine, to withdraw our troops from the field, so soon as the Governor of New York shall be prepared to set the example. The great point just now is fidelity to the National Government, and to the cause of the Union. It is in that direction only that our peace and liberties can be endangered at present. Other errors may be tolerated, or corrected and pushed, if necessary, but this is one that may convulse us with anarchy at home, and place us under the feet of that scoundrel despotism, which has flooded the land with blood, and seeks to found a new empire on the ruins of private and popular liberty. We would about as soon see Benedict Arnold himself—if he could reappear on earth—elected to the Governorship of this State, as the Judge, who has publicly declared in a premeditated and carefully written harangue, that the North is all right, and the South all wrong; and it is precisely because we would dread this result, as the worst and greatest of human calamities, that we were anxious to avoid all risks, and destroys to secure a candidate who was entirely free from local involvement, or State objections of any sort whatever. If we have failed in achieving our object, it leaves us with no choice, except as between a Copperhead, with the cunning, and malice, and abilities for mischief of the original serpent—whose election would be taken all over the world, as a declaration of want of confidence in the government, and would so far weaken its hands—and a man whose position insures at least his loyalty to the Union, and whose election, if unpopular in himself, would be only the higher testimony to the depth and intensity of that Union feeling, which is the guaranty of the nation, and has already sent more than 200,000 of our own brave youths into the field, at the expense of disfranchisement by such patriots as WOODWARD and LOWRIE. Whatever may be our objection to Gov. CURTIN, we shall not allow them to prevent us from bruising the head of the snake, when we find him coiled up in our road, sweltering with deadly venom, and ready to strike at the heel of the first heedless traveler, who comes within his reach. We shall not spare him, because we could not be suited with a club of our own choice. We can forget the candidates—the mere personalities of the conflict—in the opinions which they respectively represent.

And now, but a few words more on this topic, since we have drifted into it.

When we protested again the nomination of Gov. CURTIN, it was only a question between loyal men—between himself, and any other sincere Union man—whether Republican or War Democrat. Overruled, as we were, then, the controversy has assumed another aspect. It is a question now only between a loyal man, and a Copperhead. Between two such men, we can find no common term of comparison. They are quantities incommensurable. If the former was even the worst, and most objectionable, because, for that reason, the weakest man in our ranks—although we might deplore the choice, and regret the risk which it involved—we would regard him as a long way preferable to the foremost of the disloyalists—as we would take the lowest of the angels, who adhered to his fidelity, in preference to the lost spirit, who led in the revolt, and won for himself the applause of pandemonium, and the choice, among his fallen companions, of sovereign in hell. We have done all we could, in the conscientious discharge of our duty, to strengthen the hands of the loyalmen of the State, in this great hour of their trial. Having said nothing untruly, so far as we know, and believe, we have nothing to unsay, or take back, until we are shown to have been wrong. But even that would be unnecessary. The Westmoreland Republican, the ablest, by far, of all the Democratic papers in the State, has publicly declared that the most serious of our objections to the candidate—all, indeed, but the apprehension of possible weakness, arising out of those objections—are without foundation—while the Post itself condemned them from the beginning, and will not venture to repeat them now, for reasons which it can perhaps explain. We shall continue when over-ruled—as we should have done under much greater discouragements—to aim at the same results. We had made up our minds long since, and have acted on that principle throughout, that if misfortune should overtake the country, it should be through no fault of ours. If we have even augured evil, we are not of those prophets who would save their own credit, by endeavoring to verify their own predictions. We would rather avert the blow, if possible, like those greater ones, who denounced woe upon the transgressor, and then interceded to conduct the bolt, which they had themselves invoked, harmless into the earth. There is, with us, at least, no question of merely personal pride, or wisdom, that can outweigh the highest and dearest interests of the land, which is the country alike of our pride, our interests, and our affections.

But will the Post give us the speech? The speech! The speech! In the name of all the Copperheads, let us but have it for dissection, and admiration! The country wants to know its statesmen and its benefactors.

[For the Pittsburgh Gazette.]

Know-Nothingism—The Difference.

The Copperhead organ of this city admits, this morning, in a characteristic article, that Judge Woodward was a Know-Nothing, or anti-foreigner, in 1837, but pleads for forgiveness in his behalf, from citizens of foreign birth because he was first in the transgression! Verily, Eve, thou art innocent! It asks pardon for his sin, further, on account of his extreme youth. He was only sowing his wild oats. Well, let him reap them now.

It is well known in this community that former standard bearers of the Democracy in Allegheny county have declared that they cannot and will not support him on account of his know-nothingism. With them, other reasons, (and perhaps the same,) have rise as an opposition—and deservedly too. He legislated the poor man out of his Sabbath, as far as his puny, pedagogueish, and yet pedantic opinion could do it. According to this astute Chief Justice (?), the poor man has no Sabbatical rights that the rich man is bound to respect.

But to return to Woodward. If the views of his anti-foreignism developed itself so early, what must it be now, intensified as it is, with the venom of copperheadism? Let citizens of foreign birth remember that Woodward endeavored to disfranchise them in 1837—that he is an apologist for secession, a most unprincipled copperhead, and an aider and abettor of a system of slave labor, which, if encouraged and extended, must result ultimately in the establishment of universal slave labor, whether performed by black or white.

Strange! very strange!! remarkably strange!!! that every person that ever Woodward made was revised, corrected and approved by himself, except the one on "Nativism."

Owdad Jeninses.

REPUBLICAN.

Aug. 24th, 1863.

Maine Politics.

The election of State officers in Maine takes place on the 14th of next month. Mr. Samuel Coney is the candidate for Governor of the Republicans and War Democrats, and Mr. Eben Bradbury of the Democratic Opposition to the Administration. The result is looked for with interest, though there cannot be a doubt of the election of Mr. Coney by a large majority. The friends of the government are making a thorough canvass of the State, and prominent speakers are addressing large assemblages of the people. Among the speakers announced on the Union side are Henry Wilson, Senator Washburn and Captain Brinkerhoff, United States army.

At a meeting of the Union men of Stetson, Maine, some days since, the following resolutions were adopted:

1. That this rebellion is unconstitutional.
2. That it is constitutional to put it down.
3. That Mr. Lincoln is putting it down.
4. That we will support him while about it.
5. That Mr. Coney goes for the right.
6. That we go for Mr. Coney.

Rosecrans on the War-Path.

We have private advices from the Army of the Cumberland that make it positively certain that Rosecrans is again on the war-path. It might not be prudent, at this moment, to mention such details as we have, but this much we may say, that the advance is under such circumstances and with such combinations as look toward the most important results.

We need not say that the operations in Tennessee will be followed with the liveliest interest by the whole nation. Rosecrans is on a line of operations where every step he takes has a momentous bearing, not merely with reference to the special rebel force he may encounter, but with regard to the whole theatre of war. If he takes Chattanooga as his "objective"—and we need not say that he aims at nothing short of this—we will have seized a point whose possession by us will radically change the whole aspect of warlike operations. Chattanooga is a natural citadel in the heart of the Confederacy, and on the salient angle of the great rebel line of communications between the East and West. This seized, we shall hold interior lines and force the rebels to operate on exterior lines, thus completely turning the tables on them.

An advance by Gen. Rosecrans is also peculiarly opportune at the present moment, when the aspect of affairs is such as to threaten a new offensive movement by Gen. Lee. Of course, the rebel chief could venture on a new invasion only if reinforced from the West, and if reasonably certain of quietude there. There is the best of evidence that he has been so reinforced, by at least one corps and one division from the army of Bragg. But the advance of Rosecrans will sadly disconcert rebel combinations. Instead of concentrating for an attack on Meade, Lee will be compelled to hurry back the battalions he has drawn from Bragg, to strengthen that General to meet the menacing movements of Rosecrans; for we believe the rebel military chiefs would sooner abandon Virginia itself, Richmond included, than the great strategic mountain range, which runs like a wedge into the heart of the Confederacy, and on which Chattanooga is placed like a natural bastion. The Richmond usurpers would not be the sagacious military heads they have proven themselves if they did not so regard it.

Gen. Rosecrans will have, in the movement now inaugurated, a task that will try the best metal of his army. The advance from the line lately gained (we mean the line from Tullahoma to Bridgeport) upon Chattanooga will be through a mountainous country, excessively difficult to operate in, where, if the rebels are still in the heroic mood, they can make every defile and mountain pass a new Thermopylæ. But he is of the right sort of "grit" for that kind of business; and he has an army in as fine a condition as it is possible for an army to be in—an army which has never been beaten, and which covets nothing so much as to meet the foe.—N. Y. Times.
