The Draft.

Provost Marshal General Fry, in a letter addressed to the Secretary of War, gives several interesting facts connected with the recent draft. The law, owing to the liberality of some of its provisions, and the efforts made to resist or evade it, has not been so fruitful in its results as was desired, but with certain modifications the Provost Marshal believes the entire military strength of the country may be brought into the field. Of the number drawn in seventy-three Congressional Districts, including the fifty per cent. additional, over eighty per cent. have reported, while of the twenty per cent. who have not reported, many are absent at sea, and others, who are regarded as deserters, are being arrested as rapidly as practicable. Of the men examined about sixty per cent. were exempted, and of the remaining forty per cent. about one-half have paid commutation, and of the balance about one-third have entered the ranks themselves, and two-thirds furnished substitutes. The importance of purging the enrollment lists in future of all cases of manifest unfitness for duty, and of aliens and others not liable to military duty, is referred to, as is also the immense expense which has been entailed upon the country by the enlistment, during the progress of the war, of men who were unfit for duty at the time they were mustered into the service. The amount of money expended by the bureau of which Colonel Fry is the chief, in circling the sum necessary to procure the arrest and return of twenty thousand deserters, is but a little over $1,200,000, while the amount received is about ten times as great as all the expenses incurred.

New York Journalists—Willis, Morris, Tilton, Horace Greeley—Wonderful Industry of the Last-named.

"Agate," of the Cincinnati Gazette, in a recent letter of literary gossip, tells us of a visit to New York, and gives a glimpse of some of the celebrities of the press in that city:

At a pleasant little dinner party, at the residence of a friend one evening, I had the good fortune to meet a group that, besides a Boston publisher and some other literary people, included Horace Greeley, N. P. Willis, Theodore Tilton and Miss Mary L. Booth, the translator of Cochin, Gasparin, parts of Les Miserables, etc.

One could not help a little astonishment at noticing how young Mr. Greeley and Mr. Tilton were, and how old the perennial sayer of sharp things, Mr. Willis, was becoming. Mr. Greeley certainly looks fresher than he did five years ago; and it would be hard to tell whether he or Mr. Tilton, (who is still under thirty,) were the younger in spirit. Mr. Willis was suffering a little again from his throat and lungs, and began, as he said, to feel as if he were really an oldish man. After a third of a century's prolonged and continuous literary success, he may well afford to feel so. Gen. Geo. P. Morris, his partner in the Home Journal, is in exceedingly feeble health and Mr. Willis is consequently compelled to forego the delights of Idlewild, and brace himself to more regular work his office on his paper.

Mr. Greeley, in addition to furnishing more than half the leading editorials of the Tribune, and exercising a general supervision over its columns, preparing a weekly article for the Independent, attending to his multiform professional and political cares, and spending one day in every week in working on his farm, is finding time to prepare a history of the rebellion—particularly, I believe, with reference to the progress of Anti-Slavery opinion. It is to make two octavo volumes, one of which is to be given to the publisher in March. He has a den, as he calls it, down town, away from the Tribune office, where he locks himself up in the mornings, to dictate this history to a phonographer.

One gets new ideas of the capabilities of twenty-four hours, by noticing how this greatest of living journalists manages to fill them up. He was good enough, one morning, to call for me to ride out with him to the school, a mile or so beyond the Central Park, in which his daughter, a charming young Miss of fourteen or fifteen, is being educated. He had already achieved breakfast, the newspapers and a horseback ride. I met every morning at toilette. The ride over, he was off to his "den" to work on his book; then to the office to write editorials and answer his pile of letters; then "out to dine," and finally he wound up the evening by going off to hear Dr. Chapin preach, and to pay a parting visit to the office!

QUEEN VICTORIA made her first public appearance, since the death of her husband, at the inauguration of a statue to his memory in Aberdeen, a few weeks since. Before the ceremony of unveiling the statue, the Lord Provost made a brief address, when the Queen handed the Provost the following written reply: "Your loyal and affectionate address has deeply touched me, and I thank you forit from my heart. It is with feelings I should vainly seek words to express that I determined to attend here to-day and witness the unveiling of the statue which will record to future times the love and respect for the people of the country and city for my good and beloved husband. But I could not reconcile it to myself to remain at Balmoral while such a tribute was being paid to his memory without making an exertion to secure you personally of the deep and heartfelt sense I entertain of your kindness and affection, and at the same time to proclaim in public the unbounded reverence and admiration and the devoted love that fills my heart for him whose loss must throw a lasting gloom over all my future life."

The loss of Indians has already been stated at a little over 16,000, it having been augmented 7,209 by an excess of enlistments over calls. Wisconsin is still short over 2,000 of her first call, and will have to make up the deficiency by a draft on the 4th of November unless the men are previously supplied by volunteering. Her quota to be filled by January 5th is 9,000. The quota of Illinois is comparatively light, numbering 10,779. Being reduced from 27,235 by an excess of 9,000 on former calls. The State officials claim a further excess of several thousand men, but have not been yet able to prove it to the satisfaction of the War Department. Indiana has to furnish, 7,681; New Hampshire, 3,763; Vermont, 2,331; Massachusetts, 15,132; Connecticut, 5,417; New Jersey, 9,451; Delaware, 1,156. The quota of Ohio has not been correctly stated, but will not vary far from 24,000.

A recent meeting of delegates of the National Christian Commission at Washington, Secretary Harvey was present and addressed them in a hopeful manner of the future, assuring them that the rebellion would be put down without the giving up of a single principle, endorsed in story, particular the Declaration of Independence, and that the "Government, which has upheld the country for eighty-seven years, will live another eighty-seven years, and one day more fully appreciate his high and ex-

Gen. Rosecrans' Removal.

In the Dayton (O.) Journal, of the 27th inst., we have a new cause for the removal of Gen. Rosecrans suggested. As the editor of that paper, W. D. Bickham, Esq., was long connected with Rosecrans' army as correspondent of the Cincinnati Commercial, possibly many people will be curious to hear what appears to him a probable cause for the removal of a popular and hitherto, throughout his military career, a successful officer. But though we give the writer's statement, we think it quite inadequate to explain the action of the Government in reference to Gen. Rosecrans. But even the editor himself, in introducing the matter, only speaks of it as "part of the kernel" of this nut which some superserviceable people will insist on at least speculatively opening:

When General Rosecrans commanded the Army of the Mississippi under Grant, he took into his confidence Col. William Truesdail of St. Louis, who had been useful to Gen. Pope in Missouri, and in the Southwest, in the acquisition of information concerning the enemy. In early life Truesdail had been in police service. He was shrewd, crafty, long-headed and reticent. Gen. Pope and Gen. Grant gave him certain privilege in the procurement of cotton, and he made money at it. But ultimately he attached himself to Gen. Rosecrans, and accompanied him to the Department of the Cumberland, where he devoted himself exclusively to the service of the army, at first enjoying the exclusive privilege—as compensation of his service—of circulating the newspapers in the army, with the condition attached that he should carry the army mails. But this business he finally placed in other hands, and devoted himself exclusively to Army Police business. He organized a great spy system, and spread his network throughout Nashville and into the rebel lines. He acquired a vast fund of valuable information, and kept Gen. Rosecrans thoroughly posted. He interfered with the contraband trade which had flourished at Nashville, and finally destroyed it, and in January last, his ledger showed that, at an expense of some $60,000 he had turned over to the government over a million dollars' worth of contraband merchandize and money, none of which the government would have received but for his efforts. But while executing his duty he interfered seriously with mischievous rebels in Nashville, who exercised powerful social and political influence over even Union men. Some of them were arrested and imprisoned. Complaints were made to General Rosecrans, and after hearing both sides, he generally sustained his subordinates. Those who hated Truesdail transferred their enmity to Rosecrans. The friends of the latter warned him that a conspiracy would be organized against him, which would embarrass him at Washington. He dismissed the suggestion with honest scorn, and expressed undiminished confidence in Truesdail. The pressure against the latter caused Gen. Rosecrans finally to arrest the whole police department. Col. Truesdail was acquitted of all charges, by a military commission, but he declined to resume his old position. These are substantially the facts in case.

Now it is possible there were abuses in the Army Police Department, but it is certain Gen. Rosecrans was not conscious of them, and that he caused investigations to be made in order that they might (if any) be exposed and corrected. Capt. Clark, A. A. G., a shrewd, skillful, fearless officer, made an examination and did not find excesses. A military commission acquitted Colonel Truesdail himself, and it was finally decided that the parties who raised the hue and cry were those who were jealous that some men enjoyed privileges of trading with the army which were denied to them. Other jealousies also grew up in the Department of the Cumberland—jealous of jurisdiction, etc., which were subjects of complaint at Washington, but which General Rosecrans did not think of sufficient importance to notice, excepting when he was compelled, by pressure, to remove some of the subordinates. Touching the subject of credits due or supposed to be due, which were not given in official reports; or censures, and reflections which were not pleasing to ambitious military men; all of which accumulated against General Rosecrans, and no doubt entered into the indictments pending against him at Washington.

If President Lincoln learns the whole truth we think there will be a rattling among dry bones.

From East Tennessee.

The Cincinnati Gazette, of Thursday, says:

Lieut. Col. J. B. Brownlow, of the 9th Tennessee cavalry, arrived in the city this morning yesterday, to obtain clothing and equipments for his regiment. He informs us that there is no doubt but that East Tennessee will adopt immediate measures for emancipating its slaves. Over eight thousand recruits have been enrolled since Gen. Burnside entered Knoxville; two regiments of these are from the parts of North Carolina and Georgia bordering on East Tennessee.

Parson Brownlow issued the first number of his new paper on the 26th inst., which date is exactly two years from the day upon which the Knoxville Whig was suppressed.

COUNTRY NOT LIKELY.—Edouin, a correspondent of a London paper writes: "I have just returned from Germany after a month's knocking about. I had glorious weather, and saw all the little kings at Frankfort. There is a good anecdote of one of them. He wanted his army instructed in the use of the Armstrong gun, and got one, but was obliged to ask leave of the next King to have the target set up in his kingdom, his own not being big enough for the Armstrong range!"

THE New Orleans Picayune draws a deplorable picture of the condition of affairs in that city. Trade and commerce are stagnant, the people are impoverished, industrial employments are precarious, and of necessity is felt that something must be done to avert the intense suffering which threatens in the coming winter.

GEN. SCOTT, who is residing in New York, recently remarked to a visitor, in answer to a question on the subject of the war: "That is a matter I do not talk upon; it is a subject for others to discuss; and not for me to dwell upon in my old age. It is in other hands, and must now engross the attention of other heads."

A LONDON professor lectured recently of food. He "thanked round coffee which was pronounced excellent, then told the audience that they had been regaled with a mixture of bullock's blood, chicory, sheep's liver dried, and oil, coffee grounds. He gave them capital porter, too, made of spirits of wine, gum arabic and burnt sugar."
