FRIDAY MORNING, NOV. 13, 1863.

Judicial Notification.
We have managed to find time to write through the wearisome platitudes of Woodward and Lewis, which spin out through so many mortal columns of the newspapers. The people were anxious to hear what they had to say, and we were desirous to see how they might be remembered, and referred to hereafter. The Chief Justice is obstinate and incorrigible; he never wrong in his life, and never confessed an error. If he has an opinion, "fire would melt it out of him." He would die in "the state" and be well of course, die in his bed. Woodward, however, equally true to his nature, will deny his complicity in this matter in the course of a few years, and—as in the case of his Convention speech—even the record will not do him.

But there is more and worse, which we must needs detail, in order to avoid the risk of their own error.
A Word of Advice.
We had supposed the article of the editor of the Franklin Repository, like that of the Hindoo spoken of by Sir William Jorvis, as having slept for many years upon a hillside, had become so indurated as to be imperious to the best aimed shaft.
If we may judge from the eruptions which we have produced. If we have not drawn blood, we have, at least, dislodged something worse, in the putrid effluvia, the festering mass of impurities—which has hatched from the unhealthy stomach, and is now being vomited up, and is well known by its burning, pungent, and caustic character.

We beg to be excused. We can advertise no such occasions. We profess to publish a decent paper, and would so think that advertising a broiler. If the writer wants additional notice, as we think he does not,—he had better appeal to newspapers of his own class, or those who have heretofore thought his effusions worthy of publication, and were unwilling even to pay for their detaching the same from the columns of this State. We think we can assure him that the exhibition would do nothing to his present fame.

We are not sure that any one of his public acts which he would not have an interest in denying. If there is anybody credulous enough to believe in such a country, he would think of doing. With such a reputation, the man who does so, has a fair claim to a large, though anything but a true, and the creator who is so humble as to report, and so lost to admiration, would think him, if he had the brains, along with the weakness and the conduct of his countrymen. We have a word, however, in the way of advice, for the Thoreticals of the Repository, or such as they call themselves. If they would take about half the pains to reclaim their own District, which they have done in the Union States, through their unwholesome examples or helpless inefficiency—that they do black balling, the representative of a loyal District, who would have more leisure, and a better title to, in giving in this way, if they think it expedient to go, let it be done in a way which would do good, and in the pursuit of virtue, and over-diligent in marking and exposing such patriots as themselves. We are not sure, however, to see how the interest of the Union and its friends are, to be furthered by vulgar diatribes against the members of the Legislature, who hold the most important trusts of the nation, by the choice of their districts, in time like these; but if these gentlemen have any quarrel with the Congressmen of our northern district, in the meanwhile, they had better turn it over, we think, to their own party, and let it be done by Congress. With such aid as they can borrow from the tergivers and scoundrels either here, or elsewhere, who testify their diabolical endeavor to weaken the hands of their own representative, and showing that they would rather damn an enemy of whom they are jealous, than save a nation in its extremity. The noblest cause has always its traitorous friends, as the noblest vessel will have its bottom fouled, and its speed impaired, by the barnacles that cleave to it; and they may find consolation, therefore, as they have obviously found encouragement, in the fact, that there are here, perhaps, even more and baser creatures than themselves.

The subject of the situation of the permanent capital of West Virginia has been under discussion in the State Legislature, but was finally laid aside without any definite action. During the discussion it was made known that Graham and Clark, the two principal parties, were the capital will be situated. Wheeling, Parkersburg, Beverly and Pleasant are also competitors, and one of them may possibly win the prize.
The Albany Evening Journal, of the 6th, says the Union majority in New York State will vote very largely for the Union. The Senate will stand, Union 22, Copperhead 10; the Assembly, Union 82, Copperhead 46.
The lately elected Governor of Iowa, when studying law two years ago, worked eight hours a day for the purpose of earning money to pay his board and tuition.

The Missouri Election.

While the copperhead papers generally have been claiming that their party, the conservatives, have carried the State, the returns in the recent election in Missouri, and many of the loyal journals have even conceded this claim, we find there are very strong reasons to doubt that any such result will gladden the hearts of pro-slavery obstructive and rebel-sympathizing, when the returns shall be made. The Chicago Tribune, which we quoted a day or two ago on this subject, has the following in its Wednesday's issue, still more cheerful and decided than its previous making up of the case:
The returns from sixty or more counties in Missouri embrace all the rebel strongholds. The figures have thus far done the best they can do for the Democratic Union. Blair, with its incline policy. The small advantage gained by these patriots in their own fields will be completely wiped out by the returns from the rebel portions of the State. It is now conceded even by their bitterest opponents that the radical cast of the Missouri vote is a solid one. Glover, Kregel and Wayne—are elected. The soldiers boys are yet to hear from, and we have no more messenger boys, as with many other more menage fare, as State prisoners at Fort Lafayette; unless they would prefer to go down and see their afflicted friends in Dixie—as we would most earnestly recommend.

But there is more and worse, which we must needs detail, in order to avoid the risk of their own error.
