THE FIGHT AT RINGGOLD STATION.—Great Slaughter of the Rebels.

A letter from the Cincinnati Gazette, dated Ringgold, Georgia, Nov. 27, contains the following interesting details of the final engagement between Bragg's forces in the recent series of battles before Chattanooga.

After the battle in front of Chattanooga, the glorious result of which you have read in this issue, the Rebels were driven into three columns, leaving a sufficient number at Chattanooga, and started in pursuit of the Union army, which was in the rear of the Rebels. Rebel Dispatches.

Fortress Monroe, Dec. 5.—The Richmond Enquirer has a dispatch from Orange Court House, saying: "There was a spirited artillery fight on the 25th inst. The Rebels were driven up fortifications along their front. Last night they moved more to our right."

The Raleigh Standard, of the 20th, contains a dispatch from Wilmington, dated Nov. 20th, stating that thirteen large steamers, heavily laden, ran the blockade into Wilmington on the night of the 19th ult.

Atlanta, Nov. 28.—Bragg's headquarters are at Ringgold.

Great news are entertained for Longstreet's army. Three thousand of the enemy are advancing toward Knoxville. A fight is going on at Knoxville. Last week Winfield was ordered there, and a fight is heard at Loudon.

Missouri Public Printer.

St. Louis, Dec. 4.—In joint session of the Legislature to-day, Dr. Curry, radical editor of this city, was elected Public Printer, over D. M. Gesson, conservative editor of the "Louis Globe."
