FRIDAY MORNING, JAN. 20, 1864.

The State of Things in Rebeldom.

The rebel cabal at Richmond is now the most unprincipled despotism that exists on the face of the earth, and the most formidable to its professions and promises. It issued vast sums of Confederate notes, pledging the faith of the so-called Confederate Government for their redemption, and then turned their attention at the point of the bayonet. And now, when they have become almost worthless in the hands of the unfortunate holders, Jarr Davis and his associates are about to compel their conversion into still more worthless bonds, that soon may be used to still further issues.

In addition to this vast financial robbery, the rebel Congress has just passed a law authorizing the sale of the government property to rebel agents and one-tenth of the produce of the soil for the use of the army. But, worse than all, every man capable of bearing arms is impressed into the service. Neither commercial nor industrial concerns are allowed. No matter that a man's family will be starved if he leaves them, he must go. No matter that this wholesale levy of men will leave the contraband trade of food, and reduce all to utter poverty and starvation, the men must either go, or hide themselves in dens and caves of the earth. It is, indeed, an impressive example of the retrograde justice of Heaven, that the same men who, in their wilful blindness, have blacked fugitives from labor with blood-money, are now tracked by the same dogs, and dragged to the fields of slaughter, to die in the same manner as the dogs.

Rebels, whose term of service has expired, are compelled to continue in service until the close of the war. This outrage commenced more than a year ago, and it will continue. Thus every conceivable form of despotism and oppression is practiced by those who are struggling to maintain the tottering fabric of what is called the Confederate government. Still it is in the hands of the rebel Congress, that a government founded upon slavery as its corner stone—a government established for the very purpose of maintaining, extending and perpetuating a system of universal bondage—should do just things as these. Justice, good faith, or common humanity in its management, would have been of character. "Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles?" From the rebel victorias have escaped; but the bitter cup was filled, and somebody must drink it.

Rebels, therefore, are the people of the world, and the truth of those words which can never pass away—"With what manner of me, it will be answered to you again."

Re-settlement of the South.

One of the most important and interesting incidents of the war is now in process of execution in South Carolina. In the sale of lands, forfeited to the United States for non-payment of taxes. By this process any loyal person of twenty-one years or upward, who has any claim since the rebellion, and the lands of those who can never pass away—"With what manner of me, it will be answered to you again."

Rebels, therefore, are the people of the world, and the truth of those words which can never pass away—"With what manner of me, it will be answered to you again."

Rebels, therefore, are the people of the world, and the truth of those words which can never pass away—"With what manner of me, it will be answered to you again."

Why Delrow was Supplanted—A South-Corner Story for the South-Corner No Longer King.

It is a fact not generally known that Delrow, the Southern lawyer and the only man at the South possessing a sufficient amount of capital to edit a first class review, has been supplanted by Jeff Davis and his associates. A article based upon indisputable figures and facts.

The following are the more important portions of the article which have caused Delrow's supersession:

It is true we have believed that cotton is king; it is undeniable that we possessed a monopoly for its production, arising out of a variety of causes, but it is equally true that in a year or two the South will no longer be able to supply the commerce of the globe, with what we vainly hoped would grow nowhere else.

What are the causes of their property? Why do we have the monopoly of the South? The statistical reports accompanying the census of 1850 establish fully the reality of material conditions. And if we really hadly felt the war up to this point, we must look to it, and not to the material conditions which surround them.

They cannot be more prosperous because there is slavery; certainly it is the cheapest of labor; therefore, labor is the more economical, or rather it is the more profitable. It is, indeed, an impressive example of the retrograde justice of Heaven, that the same men who, in their wilful blindness, have blacked fugitives from labor with blood-money, are now tracked by the same dogs, and dragged to the fields of slaughter, to die in the same manner as the dogs.

Steamship Line Between Philadelphia and Liverpool.

An adjourned meeting of the gentlemen interested in the proposed steamship line between Philadelphia and Liverpool, in connection with the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, was held on Tuesday at the office of the company in Philadelphia. G. O. Pollock, President, was in the chair.

The Committee on Subscriptions reported that $10,000 had been subscribed, which is less than had been expected. The Corporation, banks and insurance companies have not yet decided upon the matter; and in a week or ten days the Committee hope to have this amount decided, if not the whole $500,000 subscribed.

The Chairman said that as far as the trade of Philadelphia was concerned he was not connected with the line, but he was anxious to see a steamship line, and he thought that an American, a Philadelphian, he had desired to see Philadelphia where she ought to be. We were once the first city on the globe.

What are the causes of their property? Why do we have the monopoly of the South? The statistical reports accompanying the census of 1850 establish fully the reality of material conditions. And if we really hadly felt the war up to this point, we must look to it, and not to the material conditions which surround them.
