McClellan and Lee's Interview.

The following is the communication on this subject, which appeared in the Washington Chronicle of Wednesday morning:

"In the New York Tribune, of Monday, the 7th inst., there appeared the following article: 'An Interview between Gen. Lee and Gen. McClellan.'—A written communication was sent to the Secretary of War on Saturday last by a former member of the Maryland Legislature, and a resident of the State of Lee, stating that during the battle of Antietam Gen. Lee had his headquarters at his house; that on the night after the battle he sent a messenger into our lines to Gen. McClellan requesting an interview at his headquarters; that General McClellan, accompanied by some of his staff, rode that night through the rebel lines and had a long interview with Gen. Lee, who, among other things, informed McClellan that his army was crossing the Potomac. The writer has been subpœned before the Committee on the Conduct of the War.'

"I wish to correct many errors therein. 1st. I am not a cousin of General Robert Lee of Maryland.

"2d. No interview could have taken place between the parties during the battle of Antietam at my house, as I live about ten miles from the place.

"3d. The interview took place three or four days afterward, and was the result of the suggestion of a mutual friend than courted by either party.

"At the time of the meeting Gen. McClellan was about, and Gen. Lee came through the lines of the United States Army, under my escort; I having received a solemn pledge of personal safety from Gen. McClellan for 48 hours.

"4th. The communication was not made by myself. The interview lasted some three hours, during a short part of which time I was present.

(Signed) "F. M."

The Washington dispatches a few days ago stated that a member of the Maryland Legislature had communicated to the War Department the fact that General McClellan had a secret interview with General Lee, after the battle of Antietam. The same statement also appeared the same day, in the Washington correspondence of the N. Y. Tribune. The copperhead World, of New York, as a matter of course, went off incontinently into fits over the announcement, which, it pretended to know, should have been regarded as a mere invention and fabrication of malice and falsehood, by those who published it. Whatever the World may think, or affect to think, as to the prima facie improbability, or incredibility, of such a statement about the pet of the Copperheads, the one Union general whom the Rebels delight to honor, we confess that for our part we had made no prejudgment, and therefore gave the statement, and the authority upon which it was made, for what they might appear worth to our readers. Them was, indeed, but one circumstance in the story that made us hesitate a little about it—namely, that McClellan had consented to go to Lee. But the letter of "F. M." removes that difficulty out of the way, by showing that it was Lee who came to McClellan. With this correction, the positive and circumstantial statement of "F. M." must be discredited, if at all, by testimony, not by mere hypotheses of improbability.

The Position of France—The Florida.

Notwithstanding a semi-official-looking dispatch from Washington has lately asserted that there was no ground for the reports lately circulated, that the relations of the Governments of France and the United States were in a critical condition, we cannot but think that certain facts fully justify the contradicted report. For instance, read the following from the Paris correspondence of the London Army and Navy Gazette, dated February 28:

"For many months the Florida lay in Brest harbor, undergoing repairs; and, though she has long been ready for sea, she could not put out, being in want of hands. Great difficulty was experienced in getting men, as the English market was almost closed by international law. The old hands had departed gunwale down with plunder; but they were either unable to get back to the saucy craft, or feared to be had shipped for another port. Complete at last, but with the Kearsarge closely watching her, the Florida, after trying the power of her engines, waited an opportunity of giving the Federal cruiser the slip. A few days ago she left Brest during a fog, and without being perceived. The Kearsarge set off in pursuit; but the sea is wide, and the Florida has good heels.

La France assures it readers that before leaving Brest the Captain of the Florida called the crew aft, and told them that he had agreed to meet the Federal vessel outside of French waters, and try conclusions with her. According to La France, this determination on the part of the skipper was received with cheers by the crew. "However, the statement of La France is improbable, for the Florida's duty is to damage Union shipping in his pocket, and not to run the risk of a single combat with a frigate even of her own size. The Florida and her depredations will soon be a thing appertaining New York and Boston. She has been fitted for sea in a French port, and was even allowed into an imperial basin by the Brest authorities. No ship appears to have been made of yet by the Rappahannock at Calais.

"When we read the above, we own that the anticipations of the writer as to the effect of the Florida's depredations in exasperating New York and Boston" are just as likely to be realized as any probabilities we know of. Such a course as that pursued by the French Government not only is, but is evidently meant to be, a case built, and that, too, of such a great provocation, that it must be attended to immediately. Minister Dayton's son is said to have arrived in Washington from Paris with dispatches from his father expressing the opinion that the accordance by the French Government of free egress to the Rebel cruisers from the ports in which they had been allowed to receive repairs, foreshadowed the recognition of the Confederacy.

Previous to April, 1863, there were 79,454 desertions from the army—being an average of 6,239 per month. In April, 1863, the Provost Marshal system was adopted, and since then the average desertions per month have been but 1,726. The total aggregate of desertions since the war broke out is 127,157—of which number 30,000 were enlisted men from New York; 15,826 from Pennsylvania; 13,886 from Ohio; 11,445 from Illinois; 8,200 from Indiana; 4,878 from Missouri; 1,945 from Kentucky; 4,878 from Virginia; 1,259 from Tennessee; 2,695 from Virginia; 1,259 from the District of Columbia, and smaller numbers from other States.

The Cincinnati Army Monopolist in Hanover—A telegram from Washington to the N. Y. Commercial says:

The House Committee on Military Affairs after a long discussion and review of the evidence on both sides, have agreed to report a bill making the Central Route between New York and Philadelphia, a post route, with the commercial privileges petitioned for.

We learn from the Census returns of Great Britain that the area of the British Empire in 1859 was 4,497,360 square miles, of which but 121,115 constitute the United Kingdom. The population of the Empire was 174,589,800, of which 123,471,231 and 62,893 soldiers were in British India. In the American colonies there were 3,238,507, and the city of London had a population of 2,803,989.

A New York house has ordered 1,500 baskets of California champagne, and a ship loaded with wine is coming round from San Francisco to New York.

The Brooklyn Sanitary Fair receipts are $468,809, and still swelling.

Truth is Stranger than Fiction.

The Chicago Journal gives the following sketch from the Police Court in that city:

The name of Ellen Welch is called by the Clerk, and forth from the prisoners' pen walks a disheveled, dirty, half-drunken woman, led by a policeman, who escorts her to the box allotted for such as she is, between the desks of the Justice and the Clerk. She is not old, but she has outlived her discretion and her virtue.

"You're charged with vagrancy—guilty or not guilty?" says the Clerk, abruptly.

The woman answers sullenly, not with a pang of conscience, but to save costs, "Guilty."

The policeman who brought her in is sworn, and testifies that he found her upon the street, partially intoxicated, at an unreasonable hour. He has seen her so frequently, of late, and she seemed to have no regular home, occupation, nor habits, save those of the debasing kinds.

"Five dollars, and ninety days in Bridewell. Call the next;" and, under this sentence, the poor, depraved, Ellen Welch is removed to make way for another "one more unfortunate," and she is forgotten by the spectators and the newspaper reporters within five minutes afterwards.

Were this all that we knew of poor Ellen Welch, we should never have cumbered our note-book with the incident; in fact, our left hand neighbor, who "does" the police sensations for our ——— street cotemporary utters an audible

"Phaw! no item there!"

—and runs his pencil savagely through the unfortunate vagrant's name, which he had previously noted down.

No item there! Isn't there, indeed? Listen: Ellen Welch was the niece of Daniel O'Connell, the great Irish orator and agitator, the daughter of his sister, Mary O'Connell, and Ellen Welch could claim as her father the Lord of Kearney Castle—a man of opulence and influence in his section of the country. Ellen had enjoyed all the advantages that such a father and his position could bestow in her youth; but, alas! in an unfortunate hour she bestowed her young affections upon a man to whom her father would not give her hand. He was an officer, but he gave up his position and persuaded her to elope with him. Leaving Ireland, they reached Philadelphia, where they resided one year, when death removed the husband. His widow subsequently came to Chicago, where she again married, but her second husband, too, was soon taken from her, by drowning.

Thrown upon her own resources, she maintained herself for a little by her needle, but one long, she fell into disreputable company, who defrauded her not only of her clothing, but also of a quarterly stipend of $30 which was bestowed upon her by her father, through the agency of the parish priest. Gradually she acquired a taste for spirituous liquors, and then sank deeper and deeper until her degradation became complete.

Where been in the habit of seeing Ellen at the Police Court during the past six years, and what she is to-day she was when she first saw her. Possessing a constitution as tough as iron, it would seem that neither dissipation nor the most shameless orgies of debauchery have any effect upon her health. She alternates between the Police Court and the Bridewell as regularly now as she did six years ago, and calmly claims to be about her distinguished ancestors as she did three years ago, when she told us her history, a sketch of which, by the (Police) Justice of Sufficient Fees, is published to-day by reliable parties, and fully corroborated by a Catholic priest, to whom her quarterly allowance is duly forwarded at every point.

New York, March 11.—New Orleans advices of the first, received by the steamer Western Metropolis, state that the bombardment of Fort Powell, below Mobile, continues vigorously. The rebel batteries replied, but none of our vessels were seriously hurt. A letter from the fleet says that Admiral Farragut intends to silence Fort Powell, so as to send his mesquito fleet into Mobile Bay: by so doing, he will cut off forts Morgan and Gaines.

Mobile Bay is said to be obstructed for three miles below Mobile, in such a manner that vessels are compelled to pass under the guns of two iron clads and a battery. Mobile is strongly defended at every point.

Mobile is almost entirely free of soldiers, 30,000 having gone to meet Sherman.

A letter from Key West gives a rumor that one of Admiral Farragut's monitors had passed Fort Morgan under a terrible fire, and another rumor was that he had captured the works.

Hastings, the defeated candidate in New Hampshire for the Governorship, was so elated at the news of the rebel victory at Ball Run, that he gave vent to his exultation in (substantially) these words: "I hope every Northern soldier will come home in a box."

Since the first of February 358 non-commissioned officers and privates, and five commissioned officers, have deserted the rebel ranks in East Tennessee, came into our lines and taken the oath. The aggregate since January 1st is 600.

The Navy.

Launch of two Ironclads.

The second vessel of the first batch of Navy Yard iron-clad war-steamers will be launched at Philadelphia on the 27th inst. She is called Tunkannuck, and, except the Mantanomah, is the only armored steamer afloat built in the Government Navy Yards. She is nearly twice the tonnage of the second batch of Monitors, measuring no less than 1,564 tons. She has two turrets, and will carry immense gun-fire each. Although at present on the stocks, the very far advanced in her preparations for sea, which can be completed in a few days. The third and fourth vessels of the same class, the Aganentica and Monadnock, building at Portsmouth, N. H., and Boston, will be finished the coming month.

Speed of the Iron-clad Roanoke.

A letter from the iron-clad Roanoke, which is now doing duty at Fortress Monroe, states that the speed of the vessel has been tested at various times during the past few months, and that it has proved satisfactory "at all times, having reached eleven knots an hour on two or three occasions. The machinery of the vessel is in excellent condition, and always ready with ease and alacrity."

The Western Iron-clads.

Within the past few days three of the iron-clad gunboat building in the West have been launched, and the other three will be afloat before a month. Two of the vessels, the Winnebago and Milwaukee, are two "gun-ships" longer than the original monitor, and have all their engines, boilers and magazines below the water. The Chickasaw having made her trial trip, is now on active service, and the Winnebago and Kickapoo are preparing rapidly for active service. Those Western vessels which have already been actively employed, such as the Osage and Neosho, have proved entirely successful, and it is probable that the others will be just as good. The entire six will be on duty before two months.
