JAMES (Cawwoode-Bick) Orlems Times:

General Herron is more than popular. Every man of his army loves him. The loyal citisens here are coming to much the same state of mind. With citisens carnestly loyal, and with the men of his command, the necessity to separate from his people here would be marked with universal sorrow. Whether in the either lot of the community, the improvements in the country made through his appointed effects, and under his centrol and supervision, or in the military improvemen a and dispositions to which his first attention is given; whether in his encouragement of genuine loyalty and fostering of mational courage, or unmasking robel sympathies wherever found, and punishing sham Unionism, hypocrisy and treason aline—in all the duties of the soldier and civil ruler, General Herron has ever been found the same cool, prompt, earnest, inflexible, faithful soldier, the same just, courteous, sagactous, self-reliant and self-poised man.

The young warrior moves among us with a dignity and affability which encourage the approach of honest men, but with an intuitive judgement, an infabile will, and a decisiveness of character which prevent the boldest man from attemnting to medity any decision the best hand pressed face bricks.
