Richard McDenough-No Z, Endolph's Plan Homicide in Baldwin Township On Saturday evening, between nine and ten o'clock, a difficulty occurred between two men named William Cox and Robt. Gettenby, at Blossemville, Baldwin townholp, five or a miles up the Menongabels river, which resulted in the death of the latter. Both of the men were "lipplemen," Gettenby being em-ployed at Horner's coal works, and Cox at an ployed at Horner's coal works, and Cox at an adjoining establishment. The difficulty originated during an argument between the parties in regard to their respective merits as workmen. Cox became excited and called flettenby allier, when the latter retorted by calling Cox a lying son of a b—. Cox then knocked Gettenby down, incked him in the right eye, broke his note, fractured his skull, and injured him so severely that he died in about. Aftern minutes afterwards.
