the rest has not done. From the beginning they have opposed the Government and the war, refusing to assist in resign money or men, and persistently encouraging the rebels to believe that the North would yet submit to a dizsolution of the Union. And General McCasalan has shared in this unboly "partizanship," and is sharing in it to day. His Woodward letter is not forgotten; his champlonship of the disgraced Friz Jones Poerres is not forgotten; his refusal, in every public speech he has delivered within the past two years, to say one word encouraging men to volunteer, or to suitain the finances of the Government, is not forgotten. And this last stump speech, which refuses to award one word of praise to those in authority for their efforts in subduing the Rebellion, shows how bitter is the "political partizanship" which still rankles in the breast of the man whom this analysis in the breast of the man whom this rankles in the breast of the man whom this and men to require the profits by victory will be incalculable.
