NATIONAL UNION NOMINATIONS.

FOR PRESIDENT:

ABRAHAM LINCOLN,

of Illinois.

FOR VICE PRESIDENT:

ANDREW JOHNSON,

of Tennessee.

Gold yesterday, to the surprise of everybody, went up to 280 in New York, but it afterwards receded to 208 and 210, at which figures the market closed. In our telegraphic columns will be found an explanation of the sudden rise. It is a relief to know that the military situation is not the cause of it, as was at first supposed.

The $300 Exemption.

Congress has, and wisely, as we think refused to repeal the $300 exemption clause in the Enrollment act. The vote in the Senate was close, but in the House, which more nearly represents the public will, the vote was two to one against repeal.

We do not deny that there are many apparently strong reasons urged for this repeal, nor that many of the best men in the House were in favor of it, including such men as General's Garfield and Schenck, for whose views we entertain profound respect. The time may come, perhaps soon will, when the reasons now urged in its behalf will prove imperative—when it will be necessary to fill up the armies of the Republic with a sweeping conscription. But that necessity has not yet arisen, and it seems to us unwise, now, to anticipate it. The public sentiment is decidedly against the repeal, and public sentiment is a stone wall hard to butt against.

The strongest reason against repeal is that, as volunteers make the best soldiers, and as the fund created by the payment of the exemption fee forms a sufficient basis for offering a large government bounty, it is better to fill up the army in that way than by a ruthless conscription. Granted that the needed number of men can be obtained by the payment of bounties, this argument seems to us irresistible. The simple question then, is, can they be so obtained?

We do not doubt it. They were so obtained before the period for paying bounties expired, and there is no good ground for supposing that they cannot be got in the same way now. In fact it seems to us that there is more and better material upon which to rely than heretofore. Large numbers of men whose terms have expired are now coming home, or have been at home for some time; and very many of these will be induced to re enlist by the offering of bounties. At least it is worth while to try if this resource does not exist; and we take it for granted that the government, failing, as it has done, to secure the repeal of the exemption clause, will at once devote itself to a trial of it.

One result of the draft now going on throughout the country will be the accumulation of a large commutation fund, just as in the case of the former draft. There is no proper use to which to put this fund but that of paying bounties to obtain volunteers in lieu of the drafted men. Whether wisely or unwisely, Congress has shown that it will not change the existing law, and there is no other course left open to the Government but this one. Men it must have; and if those who are drafted would rather pay than go, the government must try if there are not others who will go for sufficient pay. If that resource fails—and its success or failure can be tested only by trial—then a conscription without condi tions must follow as a matter of course.

It is a noteworthy circumstance that when the Enrollment act first went into effect, the Democrats made a dead set against the exemption clause. They did their best to at exhausting the language in denouncing it as oppressive, unjust, and criminal. Yet now they all vote against its repeal. Its monstrosity has not changed; but they have. The $300 clause is the same to-day it was at first. That they were its bitter enemies; now they are its warm friends. We con gratulate them that whereas they were blind now they see.

A Timely Protest.

PARKER PILLSBURY was one of the old-time Abolitionists who attended the Cleveland Convention, and we had supposed that he had committed himself to its programme and candidates, but a protest published by him in the New York Tribune shows that he was not deceived by the shallow devices of that clap trap concern. He says:

> Since the cannonade of Fort Sumter, many Abolitionists insist that Slavery is dead; was killed by the very first gun. That mistaken idea has wrought incalculable evil to our cause.
> I attended the late Fremont Convention (an invited guest,) and there, too, the same fatal delusion appeared, and even prevailed. No effort on my part, or others, availed to prevent it. It was claimed to be the opinion of all parties and classes, and that the Abolitionists were the first to discover and avow it.
> But, to me it is not a truth, that Slavery is destroyed. Rather, to this hour, it is the all-destroying, devouring dragon of our country's hope. When Slavery is dead, in that hour the Rebellion dies. Only Truth, Justice and God can prevail against it; and these the government has not used; does not propose to invoke. I protest, therefore, against any word or measure that shall soothe the conscience or hold back the hand of the people from a work and warfare only just begun.

We forgive him his fling at the government for the sake of the manly rebuke he utters against FREMONT's the ry that Slavery is dead. If Slavery were dead there would be no way going on.

A FAIR for the benefit of the Sanitary Commission opened at Galesburg, Illinois, yesterday.

The New York Street Car Outrage.

The right of people of color to ride in the cars of city railroads in New York is to be decided by an appeal to the law. It is proposed to go before the Court on the case briefly presented in our columns yesterday, but which is more fully set forth in the following affidavit of the injured woman:

> I, Ellen Anderson, residing at No. 150 West Twenty-ninth street, in the City of New York, being duly sworn, say: Got into car No. 2, Eighth avenue line, at corner of Broadway and Vesey street, while the car was standing there. Had been awaiting fifteen minutes. After I had taken my seat the conductor told me to get out. I said I was sick and wished to ride up home. He said there would be another car along soon and I must get out. I said I had lost my husband in the war and I was sick and wished to ride home. He then took hold of me and I told him not to touch me. He then went out and brought a policeman No. 918, and the policeman said you can't ride in this car. I told him what I had told the conductor, that I was sick and wanted to ride home, and I did not know anything about the other car, and that I had as much right to ride in that car as any one; and had a right to ride anywhere when I paid my fare. I told him I had lost my husband in the war, and he said he did not care for me, nor my husband either, and that I must get out. The policeman then took hold of me and tried to drag me out. I took hold of one of the straps, and he called the conductor to help him. Then they both took hold of me and dragged me out to the street. A gentleman outside said it was a shame, that I had as much right to ride as any one else.
> The policeman said he did not care, I should come out. There was a large crowd collected.
> (Signed,) ELLEN ANDERSON.
> Sworn to before me this 20th day of June, 1864.
> (Signed.)
> WM. H. BIBLE, Notary Public,
> Third avenue, corner Ninth St.

Speaking of this dastardly outrage, the New York Tribune says: "All this occurred on Friday, the 17th, the day on which Gen. SMITH felt called upon to publicly thank the colored troops under his command for their brave and soldierly conduct in the attack upon Petersburg. It is quite time to settle the question whether the wives and children of the men who are laying down their lives for their country—whether all of a race so many of which are proving their title to their birthright as Americans—are to be treated like dogs."

The Colored Troops.

We do not disparage the courage of the white troops in praising that of the colored men. God knows the courage of the white soldier has been too severely tested to doubt it or to need proof of it. But there has been a set effort to create the belief that the negro will not fight; and against this effort we cite the facts to show that he will. The dispatches to the War Department from the battle field before Richmond refer to the black troops as "assaulting and carrying the rifle pits with great gallantry," and add: The hardest fighting was done by the black troops. The forts they stormed were the worst of all. After the affair was over Gen. Smith went to thank them; and tell them he was proud of their courage and dash. He says they cannot be exceeded as soldiers, and that hereafter he will send them into a difficult place as readily as the best white troops. They captured six out of the sixteen cannon which he took. The details given by newspaper correspondents all tally to the same effect. The letter writer of the Tribune thus speaks of the attack upon the intrenchments at Petersburg:

> The charge upon the advanced works was made in splendid style, and as the "dusky warriors" stood shouting upon the parapet, Gen. Smith decided that "they would do," and sent word for them to storm the first redoubt. Steadily these troops moved on, led by officers whose unostentatious bravery is worthy of emulation. With a short and fierce cheer they dashed at the redoubt Grape and canister were hurled at them by the infatuated Rebels. They grinned and pushed on, and, with a yell, that told the Southern chivalry their doom, rolled irresistibly over and into the work. The guns were speedily turned upon those of our "misguided brethren" who forgot that "discretion was the better part of valor."
> Another redoubt was carried in the same gallant style, and the negroes have established a reputation that they will surely maintain.
> Lieut. Col. BABCOCK, of Staff to the left, "Yes sir, and we lost a good many officers and men." "How many prisoners did you take, sergeant?" "Not any alive, Sir." was the significant response. Gen. Smith says, "They don't give any Provost Marshal the least trouble, and I don't believe they contribute toward filling any of the hospitals with R-bel wounded."

Anti-Slavery View of the Baltimore Platform.

The New York Anti-Slavery Standard, the leading organ of the ultra, or Garrison Abolitionists, makes the following comment upon the Baltimore Convention and its candidates:

> "The only hope of the rebel party of the North lies in this division of the Union party, but we think it will find its hopes disappointed. And it is observable that the Convention that has spoken last has spoken best. We will not say that it was because of the omissions of Cleveland that Baltimore was more emphatic and distinct in its utterances, but that the fact is so suggests that the more thorough the anti-slavery position of a party the better its chance for votes. This, certainly, is a new thing under the sun.
> "We think that it would have been safe for the Baltimore Convention to have done its work even more thoroughly than it did. Still it improved upon its predecessor. The Cleveland platform we must think singularly weak considering the anti-slavery strength claimed for it in advance. Its assumption that slavery is already destroyed by the rebellion, though rhetorically true, in the sense that it cannot long survive it, is hardly actually true enough to excuse the perfunctory manner in which the subject is disposed of. It does not mention the President's Proclamation of Emancipation, which, by candidate can hardly regard as of no effect in point of law, however wanting he may suppose the will to enforce it to be. If General Fremont's proclamation of emancipation in his department was valid, as we hold that it was, then that of the President must have been so within his larger jurisdiction.

England and the Danish War.

The people of Germany have become exasperated at the shameful conduct of England in the Danish war. English papers report that it is not even safe at the present moment for Englishmen to travel in Germany, that the hotels are shut in their faces, and that, even in the case of ladies, no traveling accommodation can be procurred for love or money. The Danes are not much better disposed toward England. The general feeling among them is, that if England had given them her sympathy, by which they mean material aid, they could have made better terms with their enemies. On the whole, there was probably never a more hostile feeling against England than exists at this moment. Selfishness, in the case of nations, as in that of individuals, brings its own reward.

TEXAS have for some time back been intimations that General Scott has been accupied for the past two years, or since he retired from active military life, in preparing "Memoirs of his own Life and times." We are glad now to learn definitely that the great work has been completed and is already in the hands of a publisher, and will soon be given to the public. Few men while living attained so wide a popularity, and been so firmly enshrined in the hearts of all their countrymen, without distinction of party, as General Scott.

THE Austrian frigate Novara has been dispatched by Maximilian to Havana, to bring Santa Anna to Vera Cruz, who receives for his asheston the rank and attendings of a Field Marshal. The Novara is the vessel which conveyed the Emperor and Empress to Mexico.

John Cochrane.

If there is in this country a more unscrupulous and slippery politician than John Cochrane, we know not where to look for him. In 1848 he was a Free Soiler, but, having succeeded in avenging the wrongs of Mr. Van Buren by the defeat of General Cass, he abandoned the party, and, in 1852 was a supporter of the fugitive slave law and of that arrant tool of the slave oligarchy, Franklin Pierce, who rewarded his treachery to freedom by making him Collector of the port of New York. He sustained the Administration of the infamous Buchanan to the very end; he supported Breckinridge for President in 1860, and as a member of Congress in the winter of 1860-61, did all he could by his speeches and votes to betray the North; and in April, 1861, after the inauguration of Lincoln, he went to Richmond and made a speech to the slaveowners, then plotting treason, of which the Examiner of that city speaks in the following terms:

> "This Cochrane will be remembered in Richmond as the New York politician who, from the steps of the Exchange Hotel, declared and avowed, with solemn appeals to the Almighty, that if the Federal Government should attempt to coerce the South, he would be found sword in hand on the side of Old Virginia."

And this man, without a drop of anti-slavery blood in his veins, and whose life has been one long chapter of intrigue, is led to triumph to the chair of a political Anti-Slavery Convention by a non-voting Abolitionist who can find no ground for confidence in President Lincoln, the emancipator of 3,000,000 slaves, and in whose eyes Garrison is an "old fogy!"—Anti-Slavery Standard.

Gleanings from the Mails.

THE World, speaking of Gen. McClellan, calls him "the finished soldier of the day." Well said. McClellan failed to finish the war, but he succeeded to a marvel in finishing himself. The World is rarely so happy and truthful.

A LETTER written by General Washington acknowledging the freedom of the city of New York, which was voted to him, has been sold in that city for $2,250. Some memorials of patriotism live there yet.

A HOSPITAL of one thousand beds has been ordered to be established at Worcester, Massachusetts. Assistant Surgeon G. P. Jaquet will be placed in charge.

IT has been decided by the War Department that chaplains are not entitled to commutation of feed and rations.

SINCE the 1st of June, one thousand and fifty-two men have died in the hospitals about Washington.
