We called upon them for help once and they gave it, but we shall never hear the last of it, nor will they over come to our call again until we put our own shoulders to the wheel and show after testing our strengths that we really need their help. We are able enough, it all respects to defend our birders against any incursion that we are likely to be trabled with, and if we do not evince interest enough in our own welfare to defend ourselves, we may rest asymed that others will not.

We have a Militia Law which makes it compulsory upon every man in the State liable to military duty to render military service. It provides for enrolling, officering and drilling the militia of the State, and under its provisions we might, in a short time, have an efficient force enrolling, and ready for the field at a moment's hi herto, we have not done for ourselven self on record:

What is $200,000 or even $500,000 to the people of such a State as Pennsylvania, in view of the ends to be attained? Are we, the second State in the Union, rich in agriculture, mines and commerce, to be exposed evermore, not only to the incursions of the Rebels, but to the scoffs and jeers of the entite nation, because it would cost a few pairry hundreds of thousands? There may be those who think that we shall got out of this war without another war with England or Prance, but we do not. It may come before we are through with this, or afterwards, but come it will, and it will not be long following after this war, if it does not precede its close. If we whip the Rebels completely, as we feel sure of doing, we shall have to earn our right to the front place among nations. The sympathies of England and France are against us, and a bitter feeling is continually growing up between us and them. We have to send recruiting agents into the respective special consults. An Eastern cotemporary resurrects t copy of a book published at Cincinnati in 1851, and written by RAPHAEL SEMMES, late commander of the pirate Alabama. In a mere pecuniary print of view, therefore, it is the greatest folly to expose ourselves to the chances of such a loss, when we can save ourselves from it by expending half a million.

But there is another and, with us, a still weightier consideration—and that is the necessity which weighs upon the people of the entire North, at this juncture of affairs, to become, essentially, a military people. The Chicago Journal arged, the other day, the idea that if we are to carry on war successfully we must become a warlike people. This is a kelemn truth, and the people cannot carry on war without armies; armies cannot fight without being reduced in numbers, and hence they must be constantly replenished, and whence are they to be replenished except from the masses of it to country, and hence they must be constantly replenished, and whence are they to be replenished except from the masses of it to country, and now puts on a great deal of righteen indignation because the sum of the country was the supposed that, when an Opposition and one of the country, and now puts on a great deal of righteen indignation because the sum of the country was the supposed that in the people?
