rezdered What Constitutes a Good Plano.

What Constitutes a Good Plano. We be tree the musical profession is agreed in considering that a plano worthy of an artist, shoud posses the following qualities: Harmo-nious rout dees, and power of the set of the bighest treble notes, and a sympathetic singing quality of tone; perfect adjustment of the me-chasime of the setion, allowing the performer to 'gilds over the keys with the greatest ease and repidity and durability of construction, insuring lits remaining long in time and withstanding our endies climatic changes. These qualities are to be feand in an eminent degree in the planos from the celebrated factory of Chikering & Sona. The vast smoant of experience which these ma-kers have had during the forty years existence of their establishment, their indomitable energy, perserence and skill, and their intercourse with the grantest artists and professors who have thoroughly tosted their instruments, have ena-bled them to produce planos which are the admi-lation for a suit who have the informed by their agest in this city, and these that are received, are soon disposed of to are apprecisive citisens.
