large lot of clothing from Mr. Diffenbacher, in Allegheny. She has since been in jail awalting trial, and since her commitment, everal other charges have been preferred against her. Among other of her shrewdjoperations, was the larceny of a silk dress from a lady who keeps a little shepon Penn street, near Jackman's Heepy stable. She had never been in the houre before, and stepped in to change her dress, pretending that she was stranger in the city. She was shown into a room, and not only changed for dress, but enlarged her wardrobe by stealing a black silk dress which bung on the wall. I twan not missed until after the girl had gone, and it was only within a day or two that the woman thespecied that the girl Clements was the thief. She vietted the jail on Thurwday, in company with officer Herron, and had no difficulty in finding her dress; as Ann had it on! The woman then visited the Mayor's office, misde an information and returned to the jail to get the dress. Ann shood at the roll door with her hands belied her Sack, and asked the officer if he wanted the dress. He replied that he did, when Ann remarked that if the woman came to her cell she could get it. The lady did as requested, but as soon maskegot within reach, Ann pounced upon her like a tiger, and before the officer, outle prevent it, had term her bonnet completely to shreds. She then attacked the officer, with a scribbing brush, and would have "damaged" him had it not been for the timely arrival of the turnkey, who, with the saintance of another man got the interisted creature into her cell. A demand was then made for the dress, when Ann, with the despreation of a fond or inna-to, tore the dress from her body, plees by plees, and gathered them in a bundle and pilohed them at the inchars owner. This ended the very unsatifactory interview. The dress, in it, present cerificities, the value of a dress bonnet.
