This evidence is from an officer in the U. S-Navy, who sends his name to the Tribine as a guaranty of his oredibility. The copperhends may object, however, that this is anonymous testimony. Very well. We have, it so happens, evidence not open to that objection. We present below the affidavit of Andrew N. I was detailed to the Signal Corps of the army

I was attached to the signal party at army headquarters. Our party was stained near the line of battle, on Malvern Hill, during that battle, and in communication with the generate on the James river. It is within my own personal hooledge that official reports and communicadius were framentical by our party during the heat of this battle, by the saveral corps commanders, addressed to Gan. George B McClellan, who was then on board a gunboat on the James liver, several miles distant from the sense of action. I was in duty in the station on Malvern Hill, from an early hour in the morning until near noon, and during this smire period, messages were being seat to, and resolved from Borross Gazerrs — In the olden time, if socological traditions are to be credited, the anale was rather a respectable animal. According to those traditions it stood erect and did its look otion on the front of its tail, though how it was able to get the thing done to good advantege we never could make out; and as matters are at present, we do not expect that we ever will get it satisfactorily expiained. That, howrotuse the days of serpentine uprightness has world the snake fell, and it has never since been able to get up. Its fall, as the tradition has it, ned in this way. The devil, who from of old has borne a bad name, took it into his head to jump through the windpipe of the first of living serpents, and take up his domicil in its pectoral regions; and, while there, as was to be expected, he induced the animal to perpetrate some very mischievous trioks. As a punishment for these, its feet, or to speak more properly, its tail was knocked from under is, and were since it has been under the necessity, if it would go about at all, of walking upon its belly. But this was not the worst of it. It suffered more in its moral than it did in its physical condition. In deed from that time onward, its moral charsefer has been so bad that no man nor beat that ever we heard of, has been willing to trust it. For our own part we have always had physically and morally an instinctive horror of the whole serpent tribe. So much has this been the sase that whenever we dreamed of them, as in our young days while wellved in the woods, we frequently did, it was actually worse than having the "night mare." On thy belly shait thou go," was the sentence that was passed on the snake at the reserved that the reserved the reserved that the reserved that the reserved the reserved the reserved the reserved that the reserved th does not belong whelly to those regions, it is at least a link connecting this upper world with them.

In our country we have had of late a somewhat formidable irruption of copperheads, one of the most suller, stealthy and polonous varieties of all the serpents race, and one, morewer, which, in addition to its venom, has the reputation of being endowed more Horselly with the power of fascination than any other variety. It is, consequently, a variety which seems to partake more of a Pistonian origin than any other. So postent is this disbolical principle in this variety, that it seems literally true of it, that its of its faither the devil, and his works it will do. Upon the strong and intelligent in power of fascination is of no avail, but it is not unfrequently brought to bear with disastrons effect upon the weak and the ignorant. These, when it gets them within its demoniant spail, it is used in svitable ruin. And there is this romarkable fast shout its spall bound subjects that they appear to covet the destruction it has prepared for them, for with their eyes open they reah greedily into its very jaws.

Whilst the ratits make, a venomous but comparatively respectable reptile, infeats the regions south of Mason and Dixon, the copperhead has list habitation in the parts north of that famous line. Happily their numbers are but small. If they ware as planty in the Borth as the ratiterance and the services of some new at Patrick could be procured to drive them out of the country, they would reader it uninabitable.

Gen. M'Clellan in his letter of acceptance, confesses that he "could not look in the faces of his gallant comrades" and tell them that their labors and the sacrifices of so many our slain and wounded brethren had been in wain." Now, the Chingo pistform, on which he stands explicitly requires him to do precisely the thing that he says he cannot do. He must say the war is a "failure," the bleed of cur, soldiers lost, the wounded, wounded in vain, the treasure wasted. He must say it to the soldier; he must eay it to the people, the must say it to other nations. Now let him back up to the front and utter it; for he cannot say it with his face to the auditors. The political compaign throughout the Northwest progresses gloriously, and gives he most tlattering promise. The oll watchfirs have been lighted. The Union meetings are largely attended, and the people are just as carrest and enthusiastic for "Old Abe". as earrest and, enthusiastic for "Old Abs" bow s they were in 1850.
