Gen. Sheridan's estimate of Early's forces, based on statements of prisoners and the like, was swepty-seven thousand. On the other hand, Gen. Grant had made an estimate from the care fully collected statements of prisoners as to the strength of particular brigades and regiments according to which Early could not have had over ninetcen thousand of the number. No se than one-third are now hore du combat, leaving Early, according to Grant's calculations, but

But it is acknowledged that the country is verdiminit for pursuit, and that its numerous defil and narrow passes offer admirable positions for a retreating army to held a superior pursuing force at bay. A leading feature of this fight which all regard as the most decisive engage nent over fought fin the Valley, was the briliant use made of large masses of cavalry. Rebel View of the Situation. Washington, Sept. 21.—The Richmond Ex-miner of Friday last, in an article on the situation says: We have stated plainly what it is probable we shall have to withstand, of a renewed endeavor on the part of the enemy to carry Richmond and overrun Virginia. We have done so that our people may felly understand the magnitude of the stake which is to be frught for, and may appreciate the necessity of such measures of defense as may be adopted for the reinforcement of the army and cheerfully concur in them. We must all be prepared to cress oad with alacrity to whatever call is made upon us. We are not to measure sortices or personal inconvenience or disconfort in a necessity like the present; for these are not worth the thought compared with the horrors which wend follow if Grant were to succeed in his aims.

Let the ciliaens of Richmond and Petersburg seed as the enormities now being inflicated on the probable we shall have to withstand, of a rewenid follow if Grans were to succeed in his sima.

Let the citizens of Richmond and Petersburg look at the secondities now being inflicted on the people of Atlants, and there will not be a man too old or a boy too young to resist our enemy with gun in hand, or vie with our veterans in courage. Let the people of our counties call to mind the oppression, etc. I had impressed ment which basis our people when ones security within the enemy's times, and they will have a personal motive in support of the patriotic duty in saving their dear old State at all hasards from the yoke of the tyrant. We are speaking to the men whom Grant has riddended. Let him see that the cradie and the grare are not to be sneared at; that our did man and loys have brave hearts and steady hand, and will easily rout the hearts and steady hand, and will easily rout the hearts and steady hand, and will easily rout the hearts and steady hand, and will easily rout the hearts and steady hand, and will easily rout the hearts and steady hand, and will easily rout the hearts and steady hand, and will easily rout the hearts and the contest. Are our people prepared for this?

We are of the opinion that the next two months will witness the bloodlest conflicts that this war has witnessed, and that immediately afterwards Richmond will be the theatre of the contest. Are our people prepared for this?

The Griffin (Ga.) Reviet of the 12th, a copy of which his been abandoned, and says: The pretence that volunteering is gaing on tojan extent which renders the draft unnecessary, is thrown out for the benefit of fanatics who demand a vigorous prosecution of the war.
