ONLY THREE DAYS!

The circle narrows. Only three working days are left until the election. The enemy is actively at work, lying, bragging, bullying and blustering, and will do its best to defeat us. The Copperheads will poll all their votes. Rely upon that. There will be no stay-at-home men among them, and they will try every possible plan to poll the votes of deserters, sneaks from the draft and men who were aliens as long as the draft were pending. Their Seat is worthy of Emulation, and we trust our Union men will not be outdone by them in fact. But their attempts at fraud must be watched closely, and all their petty tricks be promptly met by exposure. On the three days that are left our friends can do much. The main thing to be done is to go out a full vote. To this end the active men in every District should give their personal attention to visiting the voters and stirring them up to their duty. As much hangs upon this battle as upon that before Richmond; therefore see to it that the hosts are well marshalled.

How They Lie.

A Presidential campaign has always been prolific of Democratic lies. The leaders of the Copperheads are never slow at lying, when it suits their purpose, but they invariably come out strong in a Presidential election. The chance of getting at the public spoils quadrennially stirs up this peculiar gift in them, and we are free to acknowledge that they can distance all competitors in that line, if they have any.

The cause for which the small fry roll under their tongue as a sweet morsel, in this campaign, is that the President draws his salary in gold instead of greenbacks. The lie is made out of the whole cloth, has not a particle of evidence to sustain it, and has been authoritatively contradicted many times; but what of that? Its authors knew they were lying when they started it, and they hang on it, from sheer love of lying, and from an ill-fated self-conceit that in so doing they show great dexterity in that special line of business. It is of no use to prove these fellows liars. They lie for the love of it, and with a sort of lingering hope that perhaps they can make something out of it for their party.

Fremont and McClellan.

There is a striking contrast between these two men, in one respect, and it tells altogether in favor of Fremont. When he accepted the Cleveland nomination, although he took no active share in the election, he promptly resigned his commission in the army. But McClellan, although his friends have left the impression that the certainty of his election, hangs on to his commission, and continues to draw monthly the three hundred and odd dollars for which he renders no service. He [illegible] to overthrow the Government, but continues to draw the pay of the Government. He professes to believe himself sure of an election; but for fear of accidents, you see, he holds on to the pay which is certain, preferring the certainty to an uncertainty.

Fremont proved himself to be a man. McClellan proves himself to be——what? The Democratic candidate for Governor of Ohio, although they brag, largely, do not show their confidence by offers to bet, as heretofore. The reason is they have no confidence. The Boyle tells the following good story of Mr. August Belmont, the illustrious chairman of the Democratic National Committee:

Mr. Belmont, in one of his recent visits to Washington, was accosted, with [illegible] said our Union man, "I will double that if you say so." Mr. Belmont said, however, reached the end of his [illegible] and in fact [illegible] backed out. Now, it was not that he cared for the loss of [illegible] gin Communism dollars, but what he knew very well that his antagonist would have put [illegible] and lost them on a million of dollars if Mr. Belmont had been willing, to back his candidate to that amount. This was fully understood in the crowd, and Mr. Belmont, like a wise politician as he is, did [illegible]

The picture of the national security [illegible] by General McClellan is vividly and [illegible] It is by the responsible and eloquent [illegible] Democratic candidate for Governor of Kentucky:

Now, for God's sake, and for your country's sake, look at it. Here we are, after between three and four years' war; after spending five or six thousand millions of dollars; after spilling the blood of a million of our brothers, and consigning five hundred thousand of them to their graves; after conquering an empire of territory 1,500 miles in length by six hundred in breadth; we have an army in every State of the Confederacy, and a majority of them under our control; we have every stronghold taken from them, except Mobile and Charleston and Richmond; and, notwithstanding all this, we are asked, as if we were a set of poltroons, to disgrace ourselves to the latest generation of mankind, to sacrifice everything we have fought for, and that is worth living for, and make all the world say free government is worthless; that it cannot take care of itself. God Almighty in Heaven grant that every man who utters such a thought may be choked until he be possessed of a patriot and better man.

The Copperhead wing of the "Democracy" have commenced open war in Poweshiek county, Iowa. An organized band of them on the Sunday waylaid and assassinated two Assistant Provost Marshals, who were out in the performance of their official duty in connection with the draft. The murderers fled, but the people of that region are scouring the country to catch and string them. We publish some of the particulars elsewhere in this paper.

CHARLES O. HAZLETT, Esq., otherwise "Private Mike O'Reilly," and formerly of General Meade's staff, has just been admitted to the New York bar.

The Two Indictments.

Indictment of the Copperhead party against the Administration of Abraham Lincoln.

1. "The freedom of speech and of the press has been denied us."

2. "It is your property, the property of Northern tax payers, which is confiscated."

3. "Men have been torn from their families and locked up in prison, and women too."

4. "Men are told that they must leave their homes and devote themselves to war."

5. "The policy of the administration has placed hindrances in the way of the Union."

6. "The Administration has entered upon a settled policy, dangerous to the welfare of the country."

7. "In God's name, are there no means by which we can save the lives of husbands and brothers?"

8. "We have nominated McClellan that we might restore prosperity and peace to the people."

Indictment of the Republican party of the United States headed by Abraham Lincoln against the Copperhead party.

Treason, Treason, Treason, Treason, Treason, Treason, Treason, Treason.

Which they Prefer.

It is a remarkable fact connected with the alleged unanimity which prevails in the rebel States to resist the Union, that more than one-half the residents of Atlanta preferred to go North when General Sherman proposed to remove them outside his lines, though they had their option to go either North or South, and were furnished with facilities to take them in either direction. We have not the least doubt, that the people in the States in rebellion are unanimous in support of the Confederacy, just for the same reason that they were carried out of the Union, they cannot help it, for the presence of no one is tolerated in those States who expresses an opinion opposed to rebel rule. It is a singular illustration however, of their affection for and faith in the rebel cause, to see them availing themselves of the first opportunity presented to them of leaving the Confederacy to its fate, and parting from their homes and associates rather than endure its rule.

One of General M'Clellan's chief organs explains his peculiar position as follows:

"Avowedly, M'Clellan is a Unionist. Openly he professes to be willing to give the South every necessary guarantee, provided the Southern States consent to return into the Union; privately he assures these friends who discourage the prosecution of the war that he desires peace, and that he will advocate an armistice and a convention of the States, should he receive the nomination at Chicago. He urges as a reason for not openly avowing these sentiments, that the people are not yet ready to endorse them, and considers it impolitic to take any step too decidedly in advance of the popular feeling. He feels assured, however, that the triumph of the Democratic party must end in peace, for he says that, even if it wished to carry on the war, there would be no army of any magnitude left at the disposal of the Government by the 4th of March next."

Instructions to Rebel Newspapers.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 5.—The following telegram was found in the telegraph office at Harrisburg, Va., after our troops entered the place. It is signed by Gen. Cooper, Adjutant and Inspector General of the C. S. A.:

"RICHMOND, July 11, 1864.

"To the Editor of the Richmond Enquirer:

"I observed that one of the prisoners of your paper, of the 6th inst. is headed 'News from Early's army.' Silence as to the numbers of our troops at all points and by whom commanded has become of the first importance. It is also desirable that the enemy should be myslified as to the whereabouts of General Lee himself. Nor should it be stated that General Ewell has been separated from his corps or where he is. Please bear in mind these suggestions.

(Signed) S. COOPER,
Adjutant and Inspector General."

Heroism Opposed to Lincoln.

In the campaign of 1860 Major Stedman, now in Sherman's army, but then a private citizen of Ohio, was a very earnest friend and political supporter of Douglas. During the Presidential canvass between the latter and Mr. Lincoln, Mr. Steadman, in a private interview, asked him what he thought of Mr. Lincoln.

"Sir," replied Douglas, "Lincoln is an honest and a fearless man."

Will all true Democrats consider this opinion of their former chief in connection with his public statement that there could be but two parties in this crisis—one for the government and the other against it. The generous [illegible] Douglas [illegible] Lincoln [illegible] to provide Lovell H. Rousseau and others [illegible] from raising Union troops in Kentucky. He did prevent it for a long time, and thousands of the young men of Kentucky were seduced into the rebel army, that but for McClellan's course, would have been in the Union army. And yet General Rousseau gained audience with the President, and gained authority direct from him. McClellan would have let Buckner capture Louisville, and obtain control of Kentucky. He played the same game with East Tennessee; and fastened a tyranny upon that people of unheard of cruelty, until Burnside relieved them in 1863.

Let them not doubt that these facts apply to Gen. Rousseau.

RIBAL LANGUAGE.—It has been ascertained by Colonel Wells, Provost Marshal of the southern defenses of Washington, that the rebels have been for some time busily engaged in digging up dead bodies on the battle-fields of the Wilderness, and stripping off the clothing to be sold for rags. It had been known that trains were running from Richmond to a point a few miles below Fredericksburg, and much speculation arose upon the object of railroad operations in that vicinity. It turns out that these trains are run for the purpose of transporting to Richmond the debris of the Wilderness battles, old iron, bags, &c. We learn that Union and rebel bodies are both exhumed by these jackals and hyenas, and their garments stolen. The business of these trains is directed by commissioned officers of the rebel armies.

Another Kite Nailed.

The Washington Republican has the following concerning a report circulated by some friends of Gen. McClellan, that the President had recently offered him a high command in the army:

"We are authorized to say that the President has no recollection of sending any message or messenger to General McClellan, or of receiving any from him, at any time since he was relieved from the command of the Army of the Potomac, and certainly none such as mentioned in the published letter of Gen. Naglee. If the President sent a message in writing, the writing can produced; if a messenger, he can be named. Let either be done if it can."

ACQUITTAL OF GEN. PAGE.—The Council of War recently convened in New Orleans for the examination of the rebel General Page, charged with destroying the works, armament and munitions of Fort Morgan after he had surrendered, has acquitted him. The findings of the council were approved by the Gen. Canby.

The following record words of Sam Wood are held in Dept. in memory against the day of election:

"More recruits will not suffice. Large majorities will hardly be enough. We want and must have majorities so overwhelming and decisive as will extinguish every hope in the hearts of the chiefs of the rebellion, and in the hearts of all foreign and domestic sympathizers with rebellion, that the American people will ever consent to the dismemberment of the American Union, or to the re-establishment of the despotic authority of the slaveholding oligarchy in the land of freedom."
