The Day of National Salvation.

It is one of the ordinations of Providence, one of the standing witnesses that God rules in the earth, guiding its affairs with unerring wisdom and resistless power, that all great general evils have in them the elements of their own destruction, while all great general principles, which are founded on Truth and Right are indestructible. The one class belong to the category of things which may be shaken, and which pass away; the other to that of things which cannot be shaken, and which abide for ever.

For example: Slavery was the cause of this rebellion; but the rebellion, instead of strengthening slavery, worked its ruin. It had, therefore, in itself the element of its own destruction. This is never so of any thing that is intrinsically good.

When good and evil—true and false principles—become, through human weakness and mistake, blended in one great system—as the opposing principles of Freedom and Slavery were in our national system—a tremendous convulsion is sure to be the result. "I will arise," says the Almighty Ruler, "and shake terribly the earth." Why? "That the things which are shaken may be removed, and that those things which cannot be shaken may remain." This sublime declaration is at this moment being signally and awfully fulfilled before our eyes; and by it we may see, through the darkness and tempest which now surround us, the glory and peace towards which we are tending, when those monstrous evils which have so long disturbed our tranquility shall be shaken down and swept away, leaving those things which cannot be shaken, purified, and more firmly established than ever.

It is another great law of Providence that nations, like individuals, and like the "Captain of our Salvation" himself, are made "perfect through suffering;" and to nations, as to men, it is said, "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life." Let us then be faithful, and shrink from no danger, or toil, or suffering, or sacrifice, to which we may be called in defense of those things which cannot be shaken, or, rather, that we ourselves be not shaken and swept away. Now is our time to gain all or lose all. Now is our trying hour, when we shall win or lose our crown. In the language of an eloquent writer, "One grand, decisive verdict at this critical point of history and fortune; one majestic voice, affirming union, liberty, law and prosperity; one speech which drowns half articulate dissent, will send us forward from the strife to the goal as though strife had never been."

Opinions of the Liberal Press of France.

The Journal des Debats has had two able articles on our war from the pen of M. Provost Paradol, He remarks:

"It is not Mr. Lincoln who wished Emancipation, neither is it Mr. Seward. No statesman or man of the sword from the North did this thing. It was done with regret and trembling. Who, then, struck this great blow? It is a power which governs and leads us on without our being able to resist, particularly in times of political commotion. It is necessity."

Le Temps, (The Times,) of Paris, one of the ablest liberal journals of France, says:

All those in Europe who believe with us that it is of the greatest importance to human progress that the American federation shall go out from this crisis regenerated, purified, cured of its hideous sore of Slavery, more powerful, more flourishing than ever, wish ardently for the re-election of President Lincoln."

But the Times of London, together with all the aristocratic and imperial presses of both England and France, wish ardently for the election of GEORGE B. M'CLELLAN. How the people over there must laugh at the absurdity of the supporters of the latter gentleman calling themselves democrats.

Martyrs to Principle.

The McClellan organs here are much troubled to decide on the line of party argument best adapted to meet the case of Ferry and Donahue. The detection of the crime committed by these Copperhead agents was so unexpected, that the organs at first publicly denied, in the face of the culprits' own confessions, that there had been any fraud committed. The whole thing was pronounced to be a conspiracy on the part of the Administration to cheat McClellan's military supporters of their votes.

This line of defence, however, was abandoned yesterday by the organs, in a most unfortunate way. They now admit the crime, but plead, first, that the court had no power to [illegible] imprisonment for life in exclusive. "An eminent lawyer of this city" appears on the stage and says:

"The Republican Legislature affixed a punishment of $250 fine and one year's incarceration in the county jail or penitentiary, a maximum punishment of the crime whereof Donahue is convicted. Where do the President or his court get their authority to punish at all? If they do get it, is it otherwise than by analogy? The military court try a civilian for a State crime, without jury, and the President provides arbitrary punishment!"

This "eminent lawyer" possibly could tell his political friends how a crime committed in Baltimore is to be punished in New York, which is the "State," we presume, where he imagines the trial ought to have taken place. He could perhaps also show his friends that it is no fraudulent infraction of military law—this revision of the Army List by Donahue and Ferry. But until he does show both these points in an intelligible light, probably he might better have said nothing. Certainly he does not help his party much more than he helps the cause of honest government—except that he unwittingly accepts the guilt of the prisoners as proven.—N. Y. Times.

REMEMBER, friends, that every vote will tell, and help to swell that glorious majority which will call forth such a shout from all the lovers of Freedom of all nations as this world never heard. Never before were such transcendent issues suspended upon the suffrages of men, and probably never will be again. It is a glorious privilege to be a citizen and a voter at a time like this.

The prospects of a largely increased Union vote in all parts of this State are most cheering.

The Loyal Democrats.

The convention and the subsequent mass meeting of the loyal democrats, at the Cooper Institute in New York, was truly a grand affair. It was a sublime spectacle to see such men as were there assembled casting away the fetters of an abased and dishonored party, and taking their stand upon the broad platform of the Union. We give the speech of General DIX, on the first page, and we append a few telling sentences from some of the other speeches.

Gen. HIRAM WALBRIDGE said:

The action of the Chicago Convention, if confirmed by a majority of the electors, by recommending a cessation of hostilities, the rebels recognize as tantamount to the recognition of their independence; hence, no sooner was the Chicago platform announced, than shouts of exultation and joy were heard all along the rebel lines; and the rebel President is now endeavoring to recruit his shattered and depleted legions by urging the absentees to return to the ranks, and promising them that, if fresh victories shall crown their efforts, the peace party at the North can elect its candidate. I was among the number who had anticipated the action of the Chicago Convention might eventuate in developing a loyal sentiment that would make the North a unit on the prosecution of the war; but the leaders who had control there had impressed their disloyalty upon the organization under their control, and nothing remains for any patriotic man to do except to plant himself firmly on the Union platform and advocate the success of the Union nominees, unless he desires to be the member of a political organization whose success is contingent upon the success of the rebels who have taken up arms to overthrow the Republic. We did not abandon the hope of seeing the Democratic party range itself unreservedly on the side of the country. Even after its misguided action at Chicago, we thought the rising indignation of the loyal democratic masses, at the base surrender of their leaders, would compel them to reconsider and repudiate their odious platform; but we were mistaken. Although the wrath of the people for a period made the leaders hesitate, they have now recovered their position, and, unfortunately, to-day the elements that direct and control the old Democratic organization are practically arraying themselves against the best interests of the country. This conviction is one justification for our present course, and this vast assemblage of our fellow-citizens who have belonged to that organization, by their presence here this day, have borne unequivocal testimony in behalf of constitutional government and their thorough willingness to make any requisite sacrifice to perpetuate and preserve it.

Hon EDWARDS PIERREPONT concluded almost eloquent speech in these solemn words:

There is nothing personal in this coming election; it is not a contest between Lincoln and McClellan. It is a conflict between two great contending principles—between free and despotic government; and clearly presents the question whether the prosperity, the happiness, and the greatness of our country shall be preserved or forever destroyed! [Applause.] No mortal issue was ever so vast and grand as ours to day. No people ever had such a trust to try their faith and their fidelity. Mere selfish politicians will never believe that a higher power rules the destinies of men; that the people can be trusted; that they cannot long be deceived; that in trying times, when mind is awake, and exalted by great events, the earnest people, seeking only for the truth, will have their light from Heaven; and that, "THE VOICE OF THE PEOPLE WILL BE THE VOICE OF GOD" [Great and prolonged applause.]

Gen. DANIEL SICKLES said:

After taking a rapid glance at the precedents we have, in the history of our country, of the right of the Government to coerce refractory States to obedience, and as the proofs, at home and abroad, that Mr. Lincoln is the exponent, in the approaching election, of democratic principles and free government, the speaker said that ninety-nine out of every hundred of the loyal men are for Lincoln. So are the suffering Unionists of the South, to a man, as well as the starving operatives of Lancashire, and the oppressed of all nations of the globe. Lincoln is carrying the flag of the Union, riddled with Rebel bullets, but still flaunting proudly above the heads of the brave armies upon whom we are to rely for victory and peace. [Great applause.] McClellan carries in his hand not the flag of the Union, but the flag of the Chicago Convention—the white flag of capitulation, surrender, submission to the Rebellion. Those who would might follow that standard, but they must not expect a man who has had the honor to serve as a soldier in this war to follow any such banner. [Enthusiastic applause.]

We record to-day these extracts by a brief and emphatic quotation from the last words of STEPHEN A. DOUGLAS on public affairs. Any Democrat who will not hear his dying words, would not be persuaded were he to rise from the dead:

"But this is no time for a detail of causes. The [illegible] have become armies have been raised, war is levied to accomplish it. There are only two sides to the question. Every man must be for the United States or against it. There can be no neutrals in this war; only patriots or traitors!"

Grant's Steady Progress.

Persons of a dismal turn of mind are daily heard indulging in valedictions of disaster to General Grant in his advance upon Richmond, and the pestilent fellows to whom the defeat of our armies would be joyful news, loudly proclaim the campaign a failure—echoing with silly glee the falsehoods of the Chicago platform. It happens, for the comfort of one of these parties and the perturbation of the other, that the mails of to-day bring to us, from three different directions, concurrent testimony of the good prospects for Grant's success.

First—Dr. J. W. Ross, a loyal clergyman from North Carolina, who arrived at Washington yesterday from North Carolina, says "it is now apparent to the rebel authorities that General Grant has been affording facilities to General Lee to receive his reinforcements, which Grant, by a sudden spring of his hoop will close up the last gap, and oblige Lee to capitulate. This, Governor Vance says, is Grant's plan, which has given Jeff Davis much concern, who is in favor of evacuating Virginia altogether, having repeatedly implored General Lee to do so, and not to incur the risk of a capitulation of his army." This was told To Dr. Ross, just before leaving Raleigh, by an aid on Governor Vance's staff."

Second—The well informed Fortress Monroe correspondent of the Norfolk (Va.) Old Dominion says: "The army after its reconnoissance is resting from its labors. It is generally understood that the effect of the great scare which we inflicted upon the rebels is that of intense fear. There is no doubt but that Richmond is at the mercy of General Grant whenever he sees fit to surround and take it. I do not think it will be done by any direct attack, but by a series of strategits that will develop themselves in time. It

[illegible] Not near as many as were represented at first."

Third—A letter from Butler's camp on the James river, to the Boston Advertiser, announces the steady progress of our engineering operations before Richmond, and lifts corner of the curtain thus:

"The country around here is an intrenched camp in all directions—completely honeycombed with rifle pits. The amount of labor performed by the army of the James is truly wonderful, and the works now going on are enough to keep them employed for a considerable time. If it were asked what is the necessity of all this, I suppose the answer would be, that it is intended to make the taking of Richmond a sure thing, and if it does not thunder all round before long, all signs will fail. At any rate, it may safely be affirmed that it is impossible for the enemy to advance in any direction where the territory is now held by us, and when all the arrangements are completed the doomed city must fall, unless defended by an army vastly superior to any the enemy have yet had. It may be said that they can maintain a defensive policy, and, inasmuch as the city is well fortified, they can hold it as well as we can hold our own lines. But the difficulty is that, by the policy of our present commanders, the posture of affairs in regard to transportation is entirely changed, for while we can carry everything by water to within a very few miles of the necessary points, their use of transportation must be, more than a hundred miles; and when some further advance is made in the strong, steady and dangerous approaches we are now making in all directions it is impossible to doubt that the city must fall."

Nor should it be forgotten that Grant took nearly a year to reduce Vicksburg—whereas he has lain less than six months before Richmond. But he took the Mississippi strong-hold, and with it thirty thousand men, and rebel general officers and munitions of war by the dozen and the thousand. Steadily and surely he is drawing his lines tightly around the stronger position at Richmond and he can do there what he did at Vicksburg by strategy, without flinging thousands of men upon rebel bayonets and the muzzles of countless rebel cannon. Richmond is harder to take than Vicksburg, and if he has not completed the labor in the last case in one-half the time required to finish it in the first one, it is because he knows his own business better than his critics do.—N. Y. Eve. Post.

From the Copperhead to the Negro.

The latest news from the South is, that they, the rebels, have resolved upon arming their slaves. This is the last kick of the twin monsters, slavery and treason. For months past they have been looking with hopeful eyes to the conspirators whowere represented at Chicago; but they now see that they have nothing to hope for from that quarter, so they turn in their desperation from the Copperhead to the Negro. The first is willing, but not able, to help the sinking rebels; the last is able, but the event alone can tell whether he is willing. Be that as it may, the catastrophe hastens apace, and will be more tremendous than anything we have yet seen.
