

The Pittsburgh Gazette.

TUESDAY MORNING.—(Continued from Nov. 15, 1864.)

Speech of Col. James A. Milt.

Col. James A. Milt., of the Cavalry Bureau, was summoned at his residence, in Washington, for a secret conference, during last week, when he made his following bold and eloquent speech, which was loudly applauded:

"Yankee Officers! You will please accept my thanks for your compliment. It is gratifying to see you take such a decided stand in our favor. We have passed through the most trying period of our history. We have seen the victory of the rebels over a victory of ours. We have seen the gallant form of the Union, from the fortifications of Fort Sumter, to the capture of Atlanta, and the gallant form of the rebels, from the fortifications of Fort Donelson, to the capture of Atlanta. We have seen the gallant form of the Union, and it is sure to have a wide circulation. General McClellan, and the other rebels, are trying to stop it, and they are deafens of doing what he has to say for himself and his times in which he has to live.

"We cannot find space to give any outline of the General's life; but we shall do so in the history of the country, and this is equal to giving a history of the country. We have seen the gallant form of the Union, from the fortifications of Fort Donelson, to the capture of Atlanta, and the gallant form of the rebels, from the fortifications of Fort Sumter, to the capture of Atlanta. We have seen the gallant form of the Union, and it is sure to have a wide circulation. General McClellan, and the other rebels, are trying to stop it, and they are deafens of doing what he has to say for himself and his times in which he has to live.

"We cannot find space to give any outline of the General's life; but we shall do so in the history of the country, and this is equal to giving a history of the country. We have seen the gallant form of the Union, from the fortifications of Fort Donelson, to the capture of Atlanta, and the gallant form of the rebels, from the fortifications of Fort Sumter, to the capture of Atlanta. We have seen the gallant form of the Union, and it is sure to have a wide circulation. General McClellan, and the other rebels, are trying to stop it, and they are deafens of doing what he has to say for himself and his times in which he has to live.

"We cannot find space to give any outline of the General's life; but we shall do so in the history of the country, and this is equal to giving a history of the country. We have seen the gallant form of the Union, from the fortifications of Fort Donelson, to the capture of Atlanta, and the gallant form of the rebels, from the fortifications of Fort Sumter, to the capture of Atlanta. We have seen the gallant form of the Union, and it is sure to have a wide circulation. General McClellan, and the other rebels, are trying to stop it, and they are deafens of doing what he has to say for himself and his times in which he has to live.

"We cannot find space to give any outline of the General's life; but we shall do so in the history of the country, and this is equal to giving a history of the country. We have seen the gallant form of the Union, from the fortifications of Fort Donelson, to the capture of Atlanta, and the gallant form of the rebels, from the fortifications of Fort Sumter, to the capture of Atlanta. We have seen the gallant form of the Union, and it is sure to have a wide circulation. General McClellan, and the other rebels, are trying to stop it, and they are deafens of doing what he has to say for himself and his times in which he has to live.

"We cannot find space to give any outline of the General's life; but we shall do so in the history of the country, and this is equal to giving a history of the country. We have seen the gallant form of the Union, from the fortifications of Fort Donelson, to the capture of Atlanta, and the gallant form of the rebels, from the fortifications of Fort Sumter, to the capture of Atlanta. We have seen the gallant form of the Union, and it is sure to have a wide circulation. General McClellan, and the other rebels, are trying to stop it, and they are deafens of doing what he has to say for himself and his times in which he has to live.

"We cannot find space to give any outline of

THE LATEST NEWS FROM NEW ORLEANS.

BY TELEGRAPH.

RECRUITING IN NEW YORK.

THE CONDITION OF GENERAL CANTY.

STEAMER FIRED ON BY GUERRILLAS.

ARRIVAL OF THE CONSUL AT BAHIA.

TRIAL OF FIRE ARMS.

EXTRACTS FROM SOUTHERN PAPER.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE REBEL CONGRESS.

NEXT PAGE.

OUR WORK TABLE.

WHAT IS ON OUR WORK TABLE.

</