Constitutional Abolition of Slavery.

There is no good reason why the Constitutional amendment to abolish slavery should not pass at the next session of Congress." It passed the Senate, last winter, but was defeated in the House; but a motion to reconsider was made, which we believe was never acted on, and may be called up, as unfinished business, at the ensuing session.

The query is, can it pass, now, in the very House which rejected it? We think it can. The Presidential election is over, and those who voted against it, before, have no longer any political motive for combining their opposition. The McClellan men in the House voted against it, to make political capital and to make the record straight with their Southern brethren in case they succeeded; but the election has settled all that, and left them without a motive for repeating a vote not otherwise justifiable.

These men see, now—they must see—that Slavery is dead beyond the power of resurrection. The only question is as to the method of its abolition; and every man of judgment must perceive that the best way, in all respects, is to wipe it out by a constitutional amendment, and so put an end to all contro versy.

The adoption of the amendment, besides, is only a question of time. If this Congress does not pass it the next one will; and what is inevitable might as well happen at once.

The advantage of passing the amendment this winter is in the opportunity its early adoption will afford to get the amendment before the State legislatures for approval. Some of these meet only once in two years; and as they all meet this winter, its speedy passage by Congress will enable the State legislatures to act upon it, at once.

To make the amendment valid, it must be approved by three fourths of the States. There are now 36 States in all; can we get the assent of 27 of them? We think we can. Of the 22 free States (including Maryland and West Virginia,) we have a majority in the Legislatures of all except in the Senate of New Jersey and the Senate of Maryland. We do not think these bodies would hold out against the public will, and therefore we put down these 22 States as certain. Louisiana and Missouri will make 24. Tennessee and Arkansas will both reorganize as free States; that will give 20; and Kentucky or Delaware may furnish the 27th.

But suppose neither of them does furbish it? Then we must look to Colorado, Nebraska, Dacotah, Washington and the other territories to furnish us new States sufficient to the purpose. Within a year or two all of these will come in as free States.

The amendment, if Congress chooses, may be submitted to Conventions in the several States, instead of the Legislatures; but this will involve cumbrous and expensive machinery, and will hardly be resorted to, unless otherwise unavoidable.

At all events, we hope Congress will take the matter up at the approaching session, and try to dispose of it. If the Copperheads choose to defeat it let them take the responsibility.

The Home Vote.

We stated some time since that there was no such thing officially known as the "home vote," distinct from the total vote, including that of the soldiers. In many of the counties, at the October Election, the Return Judges did not add up the "home vote," but postponed the addition until the soldiers' votes were counted, and then added both together, putting nothing on file to indicate the total of either, separately. Accordingly, there is no such thing as an official count of the "home vote," and it never can be known what it was.

The Secretary of the Commonwealth sends the following to the N. Y. Tribune:

To the Editor of the N. Y. Tribune:

SIR.—The state went made in the Tribune a few days since that the Democrats had several hundred majority on the "Home vote," on coast in Pennsylvania, has brought hundreds of letters from without the State for certified copies of the "Home vote."

To save a very large correspondence, will you please state that the official vote, as certified to this office, from most of the counties, includes the entire vote, without anything to distinguish between the votes polled at home and those in the army?

I have made application to the Prothonotaries for separate returns; but I am told that they have given the returns as certified to them by the return Judges, and as that body has adjourned sine die there is no way of getting them together again.

It is therefore impossible to obtain the official "Home vote" from a number of the counties, and as the vote was so close as to require the official returns to decide it, the fact as to who had the majority can never be known nor officially announced.

The "Home" and Soldiers' vote combined, as returned for members of Congress, is as follows:

Union	265 981
Democratic	242 122
Union maj.	13,859

Truly yours,
Secretary of the Commonwealth.
HARRISBURG, Pa., Nov. 19, 1864.

The Presidential Vote

We have official returns from 45 of the 67 counties in this State, which show (on the home vote) for LINCOLN 210,773 and for McCLELLAN 197,373. In the other 22 counties, we have reported results as follows: LINCOLN, 4,570; McCLELLAN, 9,003. These last figures are the aggregates of reported majorities only, and not of the total votes. Putting the two together, the general result is as follows:

Lincoln, official,	210,773
" reported,	4,570	215,343
McClellan, official,	197,373
" reported,	9,003	206,376
Lincoln's majority,		8,967

This is a pretty fair index of the majority on the home vote. The soldiers' vote will be canvassed on Friday, and will add about 10,000 to the majority—possibly 12,000. The total vote of the State will probably reach 550,000.

The Official Vote of Maryland.

The following is the official vote of each county in this State:

Counties	Lincoln.	McClellan.
Allegany county	9,455	1,990
Anne-Arundel	416	1,574
Baltimore city	14 994	2,562

ILL-LUCK DAYED.—A society has lately been formed in Bordeaux, France, to put down the superstitions of evil omens. As everybody knows, it is accounted bad luck to begin anything on a Friday, or to sit six to table with thirteen, or to balance a chair on one leg, or to spill salt between yourself and friend. The new society have regular dinners on Fridays, have thirteen guests, turn chairs on one legs, and spill salt around before commencing. In the whole year, during which bad luck had been thus defied, no single fatality has, as yet, occured to any member.

The Romance of Denmark.

A writer in the London Athenæum thus describes the romantic phases of Denmark:

"It is a region lying close upon the borders of a sea whose white breakers roll northward till they turn to ice near the pole; a flat, low-lying shore, behind which are landscapes green and quiet. The waves moan, the clouds gather, Oden rides by on the wings of the wind, and a flash of lightning shows Heromod flying from Valhal with a message to the nether-spirits. The elements roar, and the old deities live again as in Mythology's morning. Then the tempest vanishes, and a softer spirit steals upon the scene. The sea lies calm and still, murmuring in a low voice; the shore and landscape wear the sunshine that pours upon them in a golden shower. You hear a sweet voice singing; it is yonder mermaiden, combing out her yellow hair, smiling freshly, and luring love-sick youths to their destruction. The fisher mends his line beside his hut beeds her not; for he has just caught a fish who is an enchanted prince, and who has promised unbounded riches for being reconsigned to the sea. Close by the rocks a little maiden wanders dreamily; let her beware, for hard by lurks a beautiful mermaid, ready to lure her with soft speeches to his home under the water. All is peaceful, sunny, still; so sweet, you would never dream the spirits of the earth, water, and air were so wicked. But hark! a roar as of thunder breaks from yonder great cavern, wherein lies a dragon huge and terrible, whose food is human flesh, and whose lair is strewn with human bones. Fortunately, there is approaching a bold knight, clad in glittering armor, who will speedily put an end to the pranks of the scaly monster. Leave the sea-shore and walk inland; every flower, every leaf, is peopled with tiny people, such as haunted the immemorial wood near Athens, where love-sick Titania lisped languidly in the ass's ears of Bully Bottom. Climb this little eminence, and you will see long fled yourself among new faces. Who are those who come dancing down so wildly with robes that flash white in the wind, and feet that scarcely brush the dew from the tips of the flowers? They are the elf-girls, or maids of the mountain—terrible in the eyes of little children, and fascinating to the wanderer who sails too lazily upon this way. And what, you ask, is this wondrous region in which you have thus been wandering? It is the land of Danish romance, and is just what Oehlenschlager, Andersen and the rest have made it."

How a Slaver Escaped from the Frigate Niagara.

The Philadelphia Bulletin has the following:

"A private letter, written on board the United States steam frigate Niagara, dated November 15, off Jersey, coast of France, says: We were lying quietly at anchor, last Saturday afternoon, at Flushing, Holland, when we observed a splendid steamer pass up and stop for a pilot to take her down the channel. She was flying the Spanish flag, and was very heavily laden. After she had been gone about an hour, our commodore concluded to follow her, and orders were immediately given to get the ship under weigh. This was done in the short space of ten minutes, but as the steamer had about fifteen miles the start of us, we had as much as we could do to catch her. We did so, however, that night, and kept along side until the first streak of light tinted the east, when a shot across her bows from one of our 'Parrott pea-shooters' brought her to in a very abrupt manner.

"A boat was sent aboard of her, and her captain returned in it, bringing his papers, showing that he was bound to Matamoras. We immediately sent a boat's crew to search her, and dispatched the Sacramento, which had been in sight, with copies of her papers to London, to receive her orders from the American minister as to whether we should send her home as a prisoner or not. Her cargo consisted of quicksilver, bloom, lumber, &c., worth some $700,000, without including the value of the ship herself. On the following morning the Minister, Mr. Adams, telegraphed to us to release her, which we did, and that night, after she was miles and miles beyond our reach, what was our dismay when a messenger arrived from London, telling us to capture her and send her home, as she was a notorious slaver called the Closeone. But as this last dispatch never arrived, she of course got away. This was a snug sum of prize money taken out of your friend's pocket by the bad management of an English telegraph company."

ONE OF LAMB'S REST.—Lamb once consulted a company with an anecdote of Coleridge, which, without doubt, he hatched in his boaz-loving brain. "I was," he said, "going from my house at Enfield to the East India House one morning, when I met Coleridge on his way to pay me a visit. He was bitzfull of some new idea, and in spite of my assuring him that time was precious, he drew me within the gate of an unoccupied garden by the roadside, and there sheltered from observation by a hedge of evergreens, he took me by the button of my coat, and closing his eyes, commenced an earnest discourse, waving his right hand gently as the sentences flowed in an unbroken stream from his lips. I listened, entranced; but the striking clock recalled me to a sense of duty. I saw it was of no use to attempt to break away; so taking gentle hold of his abscorbing arm by the wrist, with my pocket-knife quietly severed the button of my coat, I decamped. Five hours afterwards, in passing the same garden, on my way home, I heard Coleridge's voice, and on looking in, there he was with his closed eyes, the button in his fingers, and the right hand gradually waving, just as when I left him. He had never missed me."

THE death of Hon. James H. Hammond, formerly Governor of and then U. S. Senator from South Carolina, reminds us of the fact that this eminent Southern aristocrat and Nullifier never once, within our knowledge, raised his voice in favor of the Slaveholders' Rebellion. He was a lifelong slaveholder, with all the prejudices and the sympathies of his class; yet he never encouraged the Rebellion, doubtless because he never believed in it. At the nod of his State he relinquished his seat in the U. S. Senate, but there he stopped. He foresaw the ruin which was involved, but saw his own impotence for resisting and averting it. He therefore retired to his plantation and watched the fulfillment of his own sad forebodings, until death kindly interposed to terminate his sufferings.—N. Y. Tribune.

MINGO COAL COMPANY.

Capital Stock $180,000.

12,000 SHARES AT $15 EACH.

PRESIDENT—JOHN GRAFF,
SECRETARY—Capt. JAMES GORDON.
TREASURER—J. R. McCUNE.

DIRECTORS:

JOHN GRAFF, J. R. McCUNE,
WM. McKEE, P. FAWCETT, (Phila.)
J. H. LYDAY, Capt. JAS. GORDON,
Capt. J. F. SMITH. Capt. J. P. SMITH, Superintendant.

This Company owns the property known as the "Mingo Coal Works," together with the "Kenan Farm" adjoining, and containing in all about 710 acres. The property is situated on the west bank of the Monongahela river, about one and a half miles below Monongahela City, in the "third pool," on which are situated 15 miles of navigable water. The mines, &c., together with a railway running to the river with ample abutment and all necessary arrangements for loading coal.

The works are already opened, drained and ventilated and in good working order, with several drives and rooms turned, and all necessary facilities for working to one hundred men, and the coal is well known to be of the very best quality. The "Mingo" is believed to be one of the most valuable coal properties in the Monongahela Valley.

The Company now proposes to increase their facilities for mining by the construction of an additional railway, and to have set apart $50,000 in cash for the purpose of making contemplated improvements and providing a working capital for the new organization.

With facilities which the Company will possess, the Directors confidently believe that the "Mingo" will prove to be one of the most substantial and remunerative stocks in the country.
