EDWARD INGERSOLL.

That our readers may see what it was that so greatly exasperated the people of Philadelphia at this man, and led to his incarceration, we make a few extracts from the treasonable speech, the sentiments of which he was called upon by a committee to retract. Instead of doing so, or offering even an explanation, he drew a pistol, after the spirit and style of Booth, and tried to shoot somebody. For this he was knocked down, secured and committed to prison.

On Thursday evening, April 13th, the evening before the assassination, the "Anti-Abolition State Rights Society" celebrated Jefferson's birthday by a dinner at the Mansion Doree, New York. The New York Daily News, of April 15th, published a full report of the proceedings. In the introduction it said:

"Among the gentlemen who sat down to the excellent feast of choice viands prepared for the occasion, were the Hon. Gideon J. Tucker, the Hon. Judge McCunn, W. E. Lawrence, Samuel Coulter, E. J. Hamilton, the Hon. S. P. Russell, of this city; the Hon. Edward Ingersoll, and George D. Northrup, of Philadelphia; the Hon. W. W. Eaton, of Connecticut; the Hon. Henry Clay Dean, of Iowa; Thomas Andrews, Esq., of Chicago, and other well known public men.

One of the toasts ran thus:

"The Laboring and Producing Classes—From the curse of a great public debt, may American institutions deliver them."

To this Mr. INGERSOLL responded—not in a few hasty, inconsiderate utterances, inspired by wine, or bad whisky, or by the excitement of the moment—but in what seems to be a carefully prepared speech, which fills two columns of the paper before us. We shall only take a few passages as samples of the whole, with the assurance that in the entire speech there is not a paragraph or a sentence to qualify, extenuate or redeem the unmitigated sedition and treason of that which we do copy.

STATE SOVEREIGNTY.

With the powers of the Federal head accurately and precisely limited, each State is an absolute and separate sovereign democratic power, with the guaranty of republicanism given to each one by the whole. The peril of aggravated and despotic power, which all history has shown to be the attendant peril of too much of the popular element in the institution of government, is checked by the absolute sovereignty and reserved rights of the States, necessary to the protection from the despotism and monarchic tendency of the Federal head. This truth is exhibited by the revolution which abolitionism, by gaining possession of the Federal power, has now put on foot. The doctrine of State rights which Mr. Jefferson so vigorously maintained when driving out the Federalists, as it was in our case by Abolitionism, because the doctrine of Secession, and it is as true to the Union and to the Institutions of America as "established in the American Constitution as is the centripetal force to the solar system, an essential element, without which its continued existence is impossible.

SYMPATHY FOR THE REBELS.

I yield to no man in sympathy for the people of the South, a gallant people, struggling nobly for their liberty against as sordid and vile a tyranny as ever imposed the degradation of a race. May, I go further, and with Jefferson, Madison and Lexington, I fully embrace the doctrine of secession as an American doctrine, without the element of which American institutions cannot permanently live.

More than half the speech is devoted to the subject of the national debt, and to an elaborate argument in favor of

REPUDIATION.

What possible right have I to saddle my great grandchild with payment of the interest on a debt of which I have expended not a principal for my own purposes, whether good or bad. Or, to reverse the position, what an absurdity would I consider it to be called on to "groan and sweat under a heavy load" of interest, created by my great grandfather, the principal of which he expended well or ill, but for his own purposes, and in his day and generation. * * *

This doctrine needs a staggering blow from American democracy, which I flatter myself the laboring and producing classes of America, under the present condition of Federal finances will be very apt to deal to it. It is a doctrine of slavery, not negro but white slavery, inconsistent with the immortal declaration that all men are created politically equal. If your son be born to the ownership of $100,000 of this national debt that we are discussing, and my son is born to the payment of the interest of it, I ask the laboring and producing classes of America to calculate for me how much of my son your son owns. * * * * * * *

I call upon the laboring and producing classes of America, the defenders of American institutions, to see to it that no dollar of this national curse be transferred from the revolutionary neck of abolitionism, where it is now pendent, to the institutions of their country. I call, sir, upon the laboring and producing classes of America to protect their children and their children's children from the poverty and vice which the introduction of this political element will bring upon them. I am willing in a high sense of pecuniary obligation as any man, yearning for America the highest sense of national honor, I say to the laboring and producing classes of America, that, in the utter rejection of this revolutionary curse of Abolitionism, the high integrity of American institutions and of Jeffersonian Democracy will "moult no feather."

This last quotation is the close of the speech. Truly it is fit that such a fellow should be in sympathy with that arch repudiator and thief who is now trying to escape with wagon loads of coin stolen from the people he has ruined. The miserable demagogue appealed to the "laboring and producing classes" to join him in bringing ruin and dishonor upon their country, and in doing honor to the traitors and rebels; and what was their response? A stern demand for a retraction of his treasonable doctrines, and when that was denied, they locked him up in jail because he tried to murder some of them; and when his brother went to the jail to bail him out, they dragged him.

No ranker aristocrats are to be found in Philadelphia than these INGERSOLLS, and none are louder in their professions of democracy. They belong to that class which we used to know as "dough-faces," miserable creatures who talked to the "laboring classes" as this fellow does, and then became the humble, cringing, cowering servitors of the aristocratic class who have done all that bad men could do to destroy the government, and whom he still lauds as a "gallant people, struggling nobly for their liberty." If those leading traitors are fit subjects for the gallows, what are INGERSOLL's deserts? for had it not been for such northern traitors as he, those southern traitors would not have dared to have made war upon the government.

A WORD TO GRUMBLERS.

Some of our contemporaries appear to be dissatisfied with the authorities at Washington, because, they imagine that they did not put forth sufficient effort to secure the arrest of the assassin of the President. It is a sufficient answer to these grumblers to point to the fact that it was a party of men acting under their authority who finally succeeded in tracking Booth and his accomplice to their hiding place, killing the one and securing the other. Very likely if they had made a big fuss, and sounded their trumpets before them, so that these critics could have heard them, they would have secured, cersume, and Booth would have received rapture.

NORTH CAROLINA.

This poor old State, which was forced reluctantly into secession by the relentless pressure of South Carolina on one side and Virginia on the other, combined with what fire-eating elements it had within itself, is fast, and with apparent gladness, returning to its place in the Union. It has suffered terribly; but the lesson learned in the school of adversity has been very good. Perhaps no people in the South were more completely under the paws of the monster slavery than those of the "Old North State," while none enjoyed less of the counter-vailing advantages, if indeed it had any advantages. It kept them poor, ignorant, degraded—without an aristocracy worthy of the name, and consequently without influence either in the Union or out of it—without prosperity or progress; for it had the weakness without the strength of slavery. To it slavery was an unmitigated curse. Under the institutions of freedom, however, North Carolina will prosper amazingly; and before another year goes round we hope to record its vote for the abolition amendment.

An Impudent Traitor.

The Richmond Times of Monday, mentions the arrival in that city of "Hon. Chas. Faulkner." If, as we suppose, the person spoken of is Chas. J. Faulkner, we hope the Provost Marshal of Richmond promptly arrested this notorious person, and will hold him till the civil authorities can try him for his crimes. Somebody, according to President Johnson, is to be made an example of, and here is the chance.

This Faulkner was minister to France under Buchanan's administration. His treachery in Paris helped very much to induce France and England to grant belligerent rights to the rebels without delay. He was also engaged in purchasing arms for Jeff Davis in Europe. When he returned to the United States, he did so as an open and undisguised enemy of the government which he had just represented at a foreign court. He refused to take the oath of allegiance, proclaimed his hatred of the Union, and declared himself a Confederate. As such our Government held him in prison, until it effected an exchange between him and Mr. Ely, a member of Congress, who was confined in Libby Prison.

When Faulkner entered Richmond in December, 1861, he was greeted as a "martyr," had a public reception, and made a speech in which he encouraged his hearers to hope for the speedy downfall of the Union cause, and indulged in the coarsest abuse of Mr. Lincoln and the northern people. He removed, presently to his farm in Berkeley county, and from there served the rebels as guide through different parts of the Valley, of which he knew all the roads and passes so well that he was regarded by Stonewall Jackson, and by rebel generals since, as the best and also the most energetic and zealous guide a rebel leader could have if he wished to surprise a Union force.

One of Faulkner's first acts, on returning to Virginia, was to gratify a personal enmity of his own. He led a party of rebels to the house of Judge Strother, one of his neighbors, and an eminently loyal citizen of Virginia, and himself helped to turn the aged man out to the road, and set fire to his house, stables and outhouses. Before Faulkner left the place he caused it to be thoroughly destroyed—fences were burned, animals killed or carried away, buildings burned and furniture destroyed; and Judge Strother, an aged and bedridden man, was left to shift for himself. He died of the exposure and brutal treatment. His son, Col. Strother, better known as "Porte Crayon," was then in the Union army, and the father was also loyal to the flag. It was out of hatred to them, for their faithfulness to their country, that Faulkner destroyed their property.

And now this perjured criminal, the malignant rebel, coolly walks into Richmond and lets his arrival be announced in the papers! Surely impudence could go no further than this. We call the attention of the proper law officers of the government to this flagrant case. Faulkner cannot claim that he was part of Lee's army, for he did not serve as a soldier, but only acted as guide when the rebel forces were operating in the part of the country he knew, and where he could lead a destroying party to the house of some Union-loving neighbor. If Faulkner may walk the streets of any place where our flag floats, then Jeff. Davis and Wigfall, and Mason, and Hunter, and Slidell and Benjamin have equal rights. Such men as this ought to be made to understand that President Johnson was in earnest when he said "treason is a crime and must be punished."—N. Y. Post.

Abolition.

I was privileged to listen this morning to a discussion, in front of the Spottswood House, which illustrated in a striking manner the "march of opinion." Four years ago it would have been unsafe to preach abolition doctrine right in the heart of Richmond, but that was the doctrine I heard proclaimed to day in presence of a delighted audience. It came about in this way: A civilian visitor, getting into conversation with a young southerner, returned some remark in favor of the negro. It was resented by the stripling, who carried a nimble tongue, whereupon the other declared with emphasis that the loyal blacks were "better men than the white traitors, any day." The youth, flushing up, said he would't submit to such language; it was ungenerous to insult men who acknowledged themselves beaten. "But I tell you," said the other, "you shall submit to it; I've come down here for the express purpose of saying in Richmond what I have always been free to say in New York. You are worse than your slaves—now are even worse than the savages of middle Africa, and I prove it. These savages are fond of making trinkets from the bones of their victims. So are you. Didn't you roast the flesh from the bones of our dead soldiers at Bull Run to make finger rings and parlor ornaments for your rebel Jezebels? The savages in Africa have a fondness for drinking from the skulls of those they have slain in battle, or slaughtered for their feasts. Haven't you done the same thing? In Central Africa the negroes divide themselves into small tribes, each warring against the other, and each boasting an absolute sovereignty. Haven't you been trying to split up the Union into petty sovereignties, each State striving for an exclusive dominion? Don't you aim, just as the savages of Africa do, to put the weak under the feet of the strong; don't you oppress the defenseless; haven't you starved our prisoners, and murdered in cold blood women and children, for no other cause than loyalty? Cannibals of Ethiopia are shrouded in ignorance, but you have sinned in the face of light and knowledge; you have known better, but refused to be human, just because slavery, your nursing mother, was born in the lap of the devil, and feeds her children on hell-broth!"

That was strong talk for Richmond, but it was listened to by a sidewalk audience of two or three hundred persons—soldiers and others—and was actually applauded. The young southron stamped, raved and swore, but it was of no use; his tormentor was pitiless, and when the crowd opened to let the victim pass, he shot away as if a forty-pound ball was at his back. It will take some time for this dose, administered by a northern "fanatic," to accomplish a perfect digestion.—Richmond Correspondence N. Y. Post.

Colonel M'Clure After the Incendiaries.

We alluded to the fact yesterday that the District Attorney of Franklin county intended to indict McCausland, Gilmor and other incendiaries who engaged in robbing the town and people of Chambersburg, during a rebel raid in Pennsylvania. By the last number of the Franklin Repository we now see that Col. A. K. M'Clure offers a reward of $1,000 for the arrest and delivery to the officers of that county, of one F. W. Smith, a captain in the confederate army, who fired the dwelling house, barn and out-building on the estate of Col. M'C. Smith is a son of the notorious Extra-Billy Smith, pretended Governor of Virginia. We had a sight at the lily-livered rascal in the Spottswood House, Richmond, a few days since, and we then thought he was one of the thieves who stole Mrs. M'Clure's spoons, as a worse visaged rascal does not gaze through the bars of either Pennsylvania penitentiary. We also notice that the "Repository Association" offers to pay five hundred dollars for the arrest of either M'Causland and Gilmor, and their delivery to the civil authorities of Franklin county. The incendiaries and robbers are now at large, and until they are brought to justice, the citizens will not have been true to their fellow and all purposes.—Harrisburg Telegraph.

A Notoriety of the "Temple" in London.—Miss Flight fell down dead in the Middle Temple this week. Dickens readers know her as the little lady who was always bothering about the courts and behaving eccentrically. Doubtless she was considered a mere pen-and-ink sketch from fancy, but she was a fact, every inch of her. She would, we know, stop the most learned judges that sit on the bench when in full swing of their awful judgment. She would rise and shake her lean weird fist at the embodiment of wisdom in horsehair, and exclaim, "Oh, you vile man!" oh, you wicked man! Give me my property! I will issue a mandamus and have your habeas corpus!" And having continued in a like fashion for a minute or two, she would bind up her papers in "red tape"—at least tape that had once been red, and had followed her dirty fortunes for years—and either subside into the seat granted her by size to the barristers, or depart triumphant from court. No usher had dared exclaim "Silence!" or send forth the hush of the cackling animal peculiar to that official. No barrister had nudged her under the fourth rib as he might have done another, and would have done had she been fairer. And the mild perspiration only rising on the tip of the nose to show that he was in any way put out, would then, as if nothing had occurred, resume the thread of his learned judgment, to be appealed against, perhaps, soon after.
