A POINT.

"A citizen of one State shall be entitled to all the rights and immunities of a citizen in all the States."—Constitution of the United States.

We quote from memory, but we believe we have given the clause correctly. It is now a legally settled point that colored men are citizens. It is also a fact that by law colored men are subject to certain disabilities in Virginia to which white men are not subject. We are not speaking of the right of suffrage, but only of personal rights.

Now suppose that two men go from a Northern State to Virginia. One is a white man, the other a black man. Both engage in business, and conduct themselves with equal propriety. It so happens that both are injured in person or property by lawless white men, burglars for example. In both cases the perpetrators of the outrage are detected and fully recognized by the sufferers. Each man knows his man—they are neighbors. The white man testifies that this is the man who broke into his house; his testimony is taken and the man is convicted and punished. The colored man knows his man just as well as the white man knows his; but, being a negro, his testimony cannot be taken, and the rascal escapes. Now what becomes of the Constitution in a case like this, wherein it promised to and invested that colored man with all the rights that it guaranteed to his white fellow citizen?

A similar illustration might be given as to their respective immunities, which the Constitution says shall be equal, but which the black laws of Virginia and other Southern States flatly are not equal." If these black laws are to override and nullify the supreme law of the land, the sooner we know it the better, so that we may surrender at once. But if, on the other hand, the Constitution of the Union is supreme, then all laws making arbitrary distinctions between men, on account of color, whether in respect to personal rights and immunities, or any other rights, are null and void, and the sooner they are swept away, either by legislation or judicial decisions, the better. The Constitution itself declares that it was framed "to secure the blessings of Liberty," and if it gets fair play it will accomplish its mission.

"LET US ALONE."

This was the cry of JEFF DAVIS, after he and his associates had dragged ten or a dozen States out of the Union and fired upon the flag of the nation. Now, after a terrible conflict the nation has crushed their rebellion and brought those States back under its authority, the same rebels are uttering the same cry—"Let us alone! You would not permit us to take these States out of the Union; but we claim the right to do as we please with them in the Union. Let us alone!" And the New York World takes up the cry,

"Let the South alone."

"The country would lose all that it has lost by the war; if it would nurture and preserve the seeds of secession, to bring forth another harvest of treason and crime. Let death, it will let them alone. Nothing else is necessary. Why, even now the thunder of the Union cannon hardly ceased to reverberate among the Virginia is as insolent and defiant as ever. No, it will not do yet to let them alone.

The letter of General BUTLER, which we published this morning, is just to the point on this subject. Let the Government act wisely and decisively in this matter, and only restore the rights which the rebels forfeited as fast as it has indubitable assurance that they will be properly used for the good of all, and not for the benefit of the least deserving class.

SOMETHING CURIOUS.

We publish this morning an article from the New York News, the leading organ of the rebellion in the North, on the subject of Negro Suffrage, and, singularly enough, it advocates the bestowal of the suffrage upon the freedmen of the South. That it speaks by authority of some party or clique down there we have no doubt; yet it is perfectly well known that the leading politicians of that section, who are getting back into the Union, oppose it savagely.

Some argue that the votes of colored men in the South, if they vote at all, will be easily controlled by the old ruling class, and that therefore they will favor the measure. All we can say to this is, that that class failed to make the negroes disloyal; and we think we can rely upon the same good instinct to preserve them from such voting as was done by white men in the days of secession ordinances. Let the principles of true republicanism be preserved, by making all men politically equal, and we are willing to run the risk of whatever influences may be brought to bear upon that class of voters.

THE NEW YORK Democrat: (German) treating of the black laws and citizens' rights, discusses the proclamation of Gen. Gregg, of Lynchburg, Va., by which the freed slaves are no more subject to the "slave laws" but come now under the "black laws," which are the laws concerning the free colored population. It says:

That these black laws are morally unjust does not need any proof; the question is does not need any proof; the question is whether they are legal, i. e., constitutional? Every free negro is a citizen of the United States, the correctness of which has been fully established by General Attorney Edward Bates, in his opinion of November 29, 1863. Our laws recognize only two classes of inhabitants—citizens and foreigners—but no middle classes with defined rights.

After going into details of the rights of citizens, and the opinion of Edward Bates, the Demokrat concludes:

By this it appears that the so-called black laws which do not give protection to the free colored men, and diminish the enjoyment of their civil rights, are entirely unconstitutional. No doubt the Supreme Court of the United States would decide against the "black laws" if any case should come before it, and thus destroy forever the last relic of slavery. We should think the Freedmen's Aid Society ought to consider this subject, and take steps to bring those odious laws before the Supreme Court and have them thus annulled.

THE GODKIN BROS.—The New York Evening Post has an elaborate article on the Godkin Bros. that the colored race is doomed to speedy extinction." We shall have more to say with the World; but, while entirely opposed to betting, we are willing to lay a small wager that the editor the copperheads.

Letter from Hon. B. F. Butler.

LOWELL, MASS., June 20, 1865.

MY DEAR SIR:—When I received your kind invitation to speak at Faneuil Hall I fully hoped to be present, but an imperative business engagement for that day detains me. This would be a source of more regret to me, if I had not recently publicly expressed my opinion upon the subject of reconstruction before the Union League at New York and at the monument dedication at Lowell on the 17th inst.

I see nothing to change in the views there expressed, although much might be added. The fault or misfortune of the present action seems to be that we are going too fast. The materials are too discordant; the uprooting of all social and political relations at the South too violent, too thorough, and too recent, to leave a firm foundation on which to reconstruct the framework of government. Calm reflection, wise counsel, aided by time, should leave opportunity for the troubled social elements to settle and adjust themselves to each other before we attempt to re-build.

Strong hates and misconceptions of political rights taught to a people through more than a generation; finally to be deeply dyed in rivers of blood, cannot on the instant be changed into love and loyalty by the turn of a resolution or by the paragraph of an edict. Time ample must be given for the soothing and cementing effects of good sense, self-interest, and dormant patriotism, awakening to a sense of duty to society and loyalty to country—to do their work.

If I were present, therefore, I could only advise that the Government should be persuaded to make "haste slowly." In the process of reconstruction. This building will be all the firmer for the delay. Meanwhile the military power can assure the people of the South tranquil quiet, until they have disposed and fitted to self-government. The late elections in Virginia teach this lesson. Above all would I ask that no class of true, loyal Union men should put themselves hastily in opposition to the Administration upon these questions, however strong may be their personal convictions.

I most firmly believe that President Johnson will do in this matter what is right and best. I know that he will do all that a patriot exalted by the best light he has, may do. Himself risen by his own exertions from the people to the highest place in his State, in spite of all the opposition and rivalry of the aristocratic power of slavery, not by accident, but by the slow degrees of successive endeavors; in a State, too, where there were no dearth of strong men; with a loyalty to the Union which show out with a brightness that made him the man of mark South, and shamed thousands of the North—the President surely can be trusted, at least for the time being, to experiment upon reducing to order a state of society of whom he must personally know as much as any man living, without provoking the opposition of the earnest and true men, who, in the end, it is to be hoped, will agree with him or he with them, for I understand the President's policy as yet is to be only experimental.

For the rest, when I do rebuild, I prefer to make the edifice of straight black walnut rather than of cross-grained white oak, especially if the sticks of the latter are so crooked that they will not lie still.

Upon another point involved in the reconstruction of the Southern States, I think history gives us an example which points the path of duty as well as policy. After the revolution in one State the bulk of the property of the tories and enemies of the country was confiscated to the use of the loyal, and the owners went out. In another State the lands were received into fellowship, and their property largely given back to them. The result has been that the country has had two States with dissimilar institutions, Massachusetts and South Carolina. Which do you prefer as a pattern for the regeneration South?—without confiscation, South Carolina; with confiscation, Massachusetts.

With regret that I cannot be with you,

I am yours truly,

BENJAMIN F. BUTLER.

Edmund Ruffin's Suicide.

The suicide of Edmund Ruffin, Sr., the man who fired the first gun on Fort Sumter, should not be passed over without comment. He came into notice with the rebellion, and died at the moment of its death. The rebellion was an attempted suicide of the nation; he committed suicide when the rebellion was defeated. Both have gone out together, the cause and effect, and no more fitting act could have crowned Mr. Ruffin's life than his style of death.

He was himself a Virginian, and for many years a citizen of Petersburg. He was born about 1785, and had consequently reached the advanced term of eighty years. He was a planter, and anxious for all that increased the profits of agriculture. In social life he was a gentleman of urbane and agreeable manners, and had a wide circle of friends. But he was, unfortunately, one of the class who swallowed Mr. Calhoun's sophistries for a new revelation of truth, and who hoped by disunion to build up in the South an empire not less grand than France, where labor would be compulsory, and a race of landed gentlemen would keep themselves unsoiled from work and calmly manage the political affairs of the land so as to advance the interests of slavery and of the section in which it was sustained. He was, in fine, a dreamer and an enthusiast, whose ambition was disloyal, and whose best hopes cost the nation its life. He killed himself, by blowing out his brains, near Danville, at the residence of his son, and left behind him a paper with this inscription: "I cannot survive the loss of the liberties of my country." A memorandum was also found to the effect that he could not live under the Government of the United States—that he preferred death to doing so.—North American.

Another French Pamphlet.

The Gazette de Cambray states that the following seditious pamphlet was found at the lodgings of a hawker, who was arrested in the village of Neuilly for singing the Marseillaise, and for having sold a seditious song concluding with 'Vive la République.'

"What is a king? He is a reasonable animal without feathers, who walks on two paws. He is a man paid by his weight—sometimes 100,000,000 fs., like Louis XIV.; sometimes 24,000,000 fs., like Louis XVIII.; sometimes 12,000,000fs, like Louis Philippe; sometimes 30,000,000fs, like Napoleon. He is a man to whom thirty millions of individuals are given to be cared no more nor less than a flock of turkeys—not at one head, but at one franc; a man who quietly enjoys the produce of his flock without forgetting to shear them sometimes, and each of whom he transfers after his death to his son or relative—a man who has a right to put innocent men to death, because it is his pleasure to do so—to convert infamous favorites into bishops and generals—a man who causes people to tremble formerly, but now causes them to smile—a man who is one day raised by barricades, and the next day overthrown by barricades.'

"The beginning of the end" in Mexico would seem to be rapidly approaching. The Monitour, the official Government paper in France, announces, apparently by authority, that no reinforcements are to be sent to Mexico. This announcement is taken in connection with the well known fact that Maximilian has sent an urgent demand, by a special messenger, to Napoleon for some more troops to enable him to retain his "Empire" is highly significant. Unless all the signs fail, Prince Napoleon will speedily have the satisfaction of seeing the "inexorable logic of events" justify his recent bold utterances upon the Mexican business, and for which he was so sharply rebuked by the "Nephew of his Uncle." French bayonets may keep "Max" in the Halls of the Montezumas for a season longer, as they have kept the Pope in the Vatican, but it is only a question of time when the people of that unhappy country shall expel from their soil the last vestige of that imputed sham which Maximillian and his royal patron are pleased to call an "Empire."—Washington Chronicle.

THE SIAMESE AND THEIR KINGS.—As we read about the Siamese and their two kings, the impression they create is quite different to that received from other eastern nations. They are more worthy people, if mere gestures; they impress us with an idea that they possess self-respect, which is never conveyed by their Celestial neighbors. It is refreshing to find a king of Siam who is a profound and accomplished scholar—a linguist, familiar not only with the dialects of Siam and Indo-China, but also with ancient Sanscrit and English—who is a journalist too, and writes for the Hong Kong papers, and is a member of the Asiatic Society in London. The second king is a brother of the first, and is always at the first fellow.—Chamber's Journal.

Southern Policy.

The Charleston Courier advises the landholders of that State, who own large tracts of land, to favor the policy of dividing these lands into small farms, so that enterprising men of limited means can engage in agricultural pursuits in South Carolina. The State would gain an intelligent addition to its population, and an increased political and physical power. Many of the soldiers now quartered in Charleston desire to procure land in the State, and under their enterprise and industry, the ravages of the war would soon be repaired, and South Carolina possess more strength than ever, and a better spirit of affection for a republican form of government. The old system of labor having been abolished, one must be established on a new basis. With a system of compensated labor, the planter will find a reduction of expenses, and an increased care for his interests on the part of the laborer. Virginia is, we believe, the only State which by the action of its Legislature in repeal of the Immigration Bill, virtually declares that it does not want an influx of skilled labor and capital. As a consequence Richmond is the only Southern city open to commerce which complains of utter prostration of its business and the little prospect of any revival.

A Necessary Measure.

We understand that the rebel organ, the Daily News, published at Petersburg since the capture of that place, has been suppressed by order of General Hartsuff. This is as it should be. One of the Richmond papers, of the same character, the Times, has received warning that it must cease to be the vehicle of treasonable sentiments, on pain of going the way of the News. A few more such warnings will tend greatly to purify the political atmosphere of the Old Dominion. The object of keeping up a large military force in the lately rebellious States is to preserve peace and encourage a return of the people to their allegiance. It would be great folly, therefore, to permit the old organs of treason to be revived, whose sole object is to keep alive and glow-ing the embers of rebellion. Every such newspaper in the South renders necessary the presence of an additional regiment to keep down the spirit of revolt. The Government is disposed to be accommodating; and, if it were unattended with expense, there would be no serious objection to the ventilation of treasonable sympathies. But experience demonstrates that the whistle costs too dearly.—Wash. Chronicle.
